Solicitors Needed By Campus Chest

As is usually the case in the early days of the Campus Chest campaign, collections are very slight. This year, however, a more serious problem faces the workers for the Chest.

A program of this type cannot be successful without a large body of solicitors who are willing to give up a great deal of time for a worthy cause. The solicitations committee is crying for people to work with it, especially in the downtown living areas. There are undoubtedly many students who would enjoy doing work of this kind. A job is waiting for them if they will only make themselves known.

This year's Campus Chest drive ends next Tuesday. It has a long way to go in order to meet its $12,000 goal, and it is essential that this goal be met.

There are probably few people left on campus who remember the days before Campus Chest—the days when solicitations for one thing or another were a common occurrence. The Chest was a solution to the problem. It combined all these drives into one, giving the students a chance to "Give Once—Serve All."

Campus Chest benefits nine worthy organizations, but it benefits the student, too. Keep that in mind when you are visited by a chest solicitor.

West Dorm Lounge Like Grand Central

One of the better suggestions to come from a dormitory council was the proposal by the West Dorm Council for increased dating facilities in that area. In the past, dating in the West Dorms was restricted to the main lounge. The main lounge during the busier hours resembles Grand Central Station and during slack times resembles the intersection of South Allen street and College avenue.

Extension of the dating areas throughout the remaining lounges and game rooms will not only supply a more congenial atmosphere, but give the student council the additional responsibilities it desires.

Although the original code has been changed by the students to specify chaperoned dating and amended by the Senate committee with respect to hours, the code still provides the council with the responsibility for operation and enforcement of the code.

The West Dorm council is ready to shoulder this responsibility in an attempt at more effective student government. The Senate committee, in approving the code, has expressed a belief that the West Dorm Council can accept the responsibility.

Nittany Can Lose Say in AIM Voting

At a Monday night meeting of Nittany Council a measure was passed which forbids the council's representatives on the Association of Independent Men Board of Governors from voting on issues raised under new business and upon which the council has not taken prior action.

Basically, perhaps, the idea is a good one, but the council seems to have overlooked one very important fact. Under the present setup, if a matter requiring immediate action is brought up at a board meeting the representatives of the Nittany Council should not even express a view. Thus the council loses any voice in the decision made.

Such stifling of the council's representatives seems a lack of faith in their ability to decide things as well as a knock at representative government. The council did, however, realize that its representatives should not be forced to vote as instructed by the council.

A plan of this sort would have been a blow to the very concept of democratic representative government. It would have slowed up legislative processes hopelessly, since any new information brought to light on a subject would have to be taken back to the representative group if such information might warrant a change in the group's previous decision on the matter.

The council should reconsider its proposal, at least to the extent of giving its representatives some discretion under certain conditions.

"Just forget about tenure for awhile—it comes as a result of being a good teacher."

It's A Loux-Lu

By BETTIE LOUX

The sad plight of West Dorm students whose sleep is disturbed weekly by the distribution of bed linen was brought to the attention of the dormitory council last week in the form of a suggestion by the chairman of the dorm housing committee. The suggestion, that sheets be delivered in the afternoon rather than the morning, passed the council and will be sent on to the department of housing.

This action leads us to believe that the council is dominated by a pressure group of late sleepers who have forgotten that they also represent the masses scheduled for eight and nine o'clock classes, and particularly those masses who never quite make it to class.

It is a simple matter to shut off an offending alarm clock when it clangs through the still of the dawn; it is not much harder to lie to your roommate that the class was canceled and "let me sleep, will ya?"

But a bright-and-chipper department of housing lackey, intent on delivering a brand new sheet and pillowcase to your door and even more determined to collect those from the week before, is the hardest thing in the world to shake off. It is virtually impossible to explain to the dear old lady that you want to sleep, don't want to go to class, and don't care whether you get clean sheets or not.

Thus we have concluded that morning distribution of sheets, the earlier the better, is comparable to an awakening call from hotel room service and insures the student of making at least one early class a week.

Take our maid, for instance, a motherly individual who feels it her duty to rouse us from slumber with a gentle technique, at first. Should we be half awake we see her standing firm against the wall, glowering intently at our prostrate form, and using a sort of mental telepathy. If through her telepathy our conscience does not awake and shame our body into arising, she tries a loud clearing of the throat and a barking "Don't ya want your sheets changed?" This is a purely rhetorical question of which we both know the answer.

We feign sleep and hold tightly onto the sheets on the bed. "It's Tuesday, dearie," she coaxes. "Just think how nice these clean sheets will feel tonight. You've slept long enough, now, it's half-past eight . . ." She tugs at the sheet . . . we clutch it in a death grip. "All right, dearie, I'll count ten and
