

Rutgers Expected To Be Troublesome East's Best Harriers in IC4A's

By JOHN SHEPPARD

Having been bounced from its ranking among the top teams in the East, Penn State's football forces will attempt to rebound tomorrow on Beaver Field against a Rutgers eleven which has been rebounding for the last three weeks.

The Scarlet-garbed gridders from New Brunswick, N.J., failed to win in their first four outings but have come along with a rush to win three straight victories.

Rutgers has given the Lions nothing but trouble during the last two years. In 1950 State edged the Scarlet, 18-14, and last year the Lions took a 13-7 decision thanks to two sensational 70-yard plus touchdown gallops by Bob Pollard.

Plenty of Deception

From past experience, from current Rutgers improvement, and from Lion Scout Frank Patrick's appraisal, Rutgers will be a trouble again tomorrow.

Patrick says Rutgers packs plenty of deception striking from numerous variations of the T-formation. The Scarlet basically uses the straight T. However, flankers and men in motion will be used with it.

Occasionally Rutgers uses a deep-T, with the fullback lined up two or three yards deeper than the halfbacks. And, on rare occasions it uses the split-T.

Still another formation of the Scarlet's, the spread, is the one State will have to watch. This is the Rutgers passing formation which has developed quite effectively with Jack Jeffers doing the tossing. Jeffers only became a starter with the fourth game but owns a good record of 40 completions in 85 throws for 640 yards and eight touchdowns.

Speedy Soph Halfback

Patrick was high in praise of the Scarlet's ace end Russ Sandblom. One of the best in the East, Sandblom has caught 21 passes for 353 yards and three touchdowns. He and Jeffers form a combination which will have to be watched.

On the ground, Rutgers' Steve Johnson has caught the eye of Patrick. The speedy soph halfback leads the club in rushing yardage with 394 yards for with an average of 4.5 per carry.

Helping the Scarlet ground game is fullback Don Duncan. Patrick calls him a "better than average" back who has ground out 4.6 yards per try.

Along the line, Patrick says Rutgers is "big and rugged offensively and defensively." At the defensive tackles Howie Anderson (235) and Les Miller (225) are hard men to get around Sandblom doubles well at the safety position.

Playing for Pros

Charles (Chuck) Drazenovich, three-letter athlete at Penn State, is playing football for the professional Washington Redskins.

Twenty-four minutes, fifty-five and one-tenth seconds—that's the record five-mile mark on which the East's established distance runners will focus their efforts in the 44th renewal of the IC4A cross-country championships at Van Cortlandt Park, New York, Monday.

Cadet Dick Shea of Army, winner of the individual title the past two seasons, will not make his presence felt this year due to the graduation route. But a whole host of top runners will bid for the coveted crown, along with aiding their team's victory chances.

Penn State's hill-and-dalers will be striving for their third straight team title. A four-way race among State, Syracuse, Michigan State, and Army is foreseen in the IC race.

The marked harriers are Ray Osterhout of Syracuse, Lamont Smith and Red Hollen of State, Jim Kepford of MSC, Fred Dwyer of Villanova, Bob Day and Lew Olive of Army, C. Thoburn Maxwell of Princeton, and Frank Egan of Manhattan.

Of those the expert's have cited, we like Osterhout, Smith and Hollen.

These three distance men catch our eye on the merit of their fine performances during the past few weeks. The others have also been running well lately, but Osterhout, Smith and Hollen have the reputation of "comers" and run their best races when the opposition is sternest.

Osterhout is the prize harrier of Coach Bob Grieve of Syracuse. Unbeaten to date, the bespectacled thinclad is the main reason why the Orange hill-and-dalers, NCAA champs last fall, are undefeated. The 20-year-old Syracuse junior has already erased several cross-country standards. His fastest time (25:25.6) was run over the Van Cortlandt Park course, site of Monday's running battle. That's the fastest time anyone has run over the VCP course this season. In fact, it's the fastest clocking posted by any harrier in the East.
