Simes Says No Change On Drinking

No change in the present policy of enforcement of drinking at fraternities is planned by the College, Dean of Men Frank J. Simes told fraternity presidents and Interfraternity Council representatives at a meeting last night.

The meeting was called by the Dean of Men's office in an attempt to clarify College and state regulations on drinking, according to a statement read by Dean Simes.

Simes' statement explained that the College regulation W-4 which forbids alcoholic beverages at social functions, includes beer—bottled, or in any other form.

The summation of the statement urged a program of "dry" social activities in houses.

The statement closed with the opinion that fraternities can best adjust to the present limits by accepting the "practical necessity" for such rules, and "to organize a social program which is stimulating and enjoyable and which does not involve the serving of alcoholic beverages."

The College is not charged with the enforcement of state laws involving minor drinking, Simes told the presidents, but it "cannot permit" the serving of alcoholic beverages by fraternities in violation of these laws.

Simes expressed his hope for "continued mutual respect and confidence" between the fraternities and the dean's office. He also assured the presidents that "we will work through the IFC "to inform fraternities of any change of policy."

He stressed the need for not depending on "rumors" for the facts in any situation that may arise.

Blue Key Allots Display Prize

Twenty dollars in prizes has been allotted by Blue Key, junior men's honorary society, for their window display contest in the Nittany-Pollock area.

John Flanagan, head of the decorations contest committee, said that $10 would be awarded to the dormitory judged best in each area. Judging, which will be held at 7:30 p. m. Thursday, will be based on the overall appearance of the building, he said.

Judges of the competition are J. Y. Roy, assistant professor of fine arts; Milton S. Osborne, professor of architecture; and John Laubach, All-College president.

3 Guest Engineers To Speak Tonight

Three guest engineers will speak at the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Institute of Radio Engineers meeting 7:30 tonight in 219 Electrical Engineering.

The speakers are W. M. Hutchison and F. D. Brown of the Westinghouse Electric Corporation, and S. V. Smith of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The design of ignition rectifier locomotive apparatus and the performance of these locomotives will be discussed.

Farm Council Rebukes Chesterman Statements

Prexy Accepts Honorary Post

President Milton S. Eisenhower has accepted the honorary co-chairmanship of the newly-formed American-Korean Foundation, it was announced Sunday by Palmer Bevis, executive director of the organization.

Although it was reported in the Herald-Tribune yesterday that the President accepted the chairmanship, Richard Maloney, administrative assistant, Office of the President, clarified the appointment as one of an advisory capacity. He explained that Dr. You Chan Yang, Korean ambassador to the United States, will serve as honorary co-chairman with the Prexy.

Maloney said the appointment will not affect the President's duties at the College, and that the position will not require a great deal of the President's efforts away from the campus.

In a prepared statement, the Prexy, a close observer of the Korean situation, said, "I have discussed the invitation to become chairman of the foundation with several friends, including John Foster Dulles, and the consensus is that I should undertake this responsibility in behalf of the heroic, long-suffering Korean people. I have great admiration for the steadfast manner in which the Korean nation is meeting the challenge of Communist aggression.

Pres. Milton S. Eisenhower
Named to a new post

"News of the foundation's program is bound to have repercussions favorable to the Free World throughout Asia. I urge upon everyone the necessity for generous support of this program."

The foundation, located in New York, is a non-profit, non-political, and non-sectarian organization, with the intent of bringing American and Korean people closer together culturally, socially, and economically. Bevis explained that the organization is now concentrating on relief and rehabilitation measures and will care for some 100,000 Korean war orphans. In addition, it will supply antibiotics and food supplements to Koreans, and scholarships for Korean students.

Other persons who have supported the foundation include Dulles, Nelson Rockefeller, James Doolittle, Walter Judd, and others.

Dr. Yang said yesterday, "The news that Dr. Eisenhower has accepted the chairmanship of the American-Korean Foundation will be received with the greatest enthusiasm in Korea. The Korean people are deeply appreciative of the friendship and sympathy of the American people which they know will be greatly increased in tangible form through the instrumentality of the foundation."

This new appointment for the Prexy follows the appointment by his brother, President-elect Dwight D. Eisenhower, to serve with Rockefeller and Dr. Arthur S. Fleming, president of Ohio Wesleyan University, on a special committee to study plans for streamlining and modernizing the executive branch of the federal government.

Group Urges Establishment Of Vet School

The State Council of Farm Organizations yesterday took exception to the recent report of the Chesterman committee which declared construction at the College "expensive and detrimental."

The council at the same time approved a statement of policy favoring establishment of a School of Veterinary Medicine at the College.

In defending the construction, the council specifically favored expansion of the School of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts department. The council pointed out that Penn State is the only land grant college in the state.

Departments Investigated
The farm council's resolution called for "full and adequate support for agriculture and mechanical arts and, if necessary, an appeal to the state legislature to earmark appropriations for these phases of the college program."

The Chesterman committee, a group appointed by Gov. John S. Fine to investigate 30 state departments with a view towards economy, has reported on the Department of Public Instruction and the State Highways Department. In both departments, the "little Hoover" committee says, millions of dollars can be saved each year through reorganization and following other committee suggestions.

Veterinarian Shortage
In its report on the instruction department the committee cited Penn State as "expensive to the state and detrimental to the state's private liberal arts colleges."

The State Council of Farm Organizations said, in support of a veterinary school at the College, that "a serious shortage of veterinarians now exists, and such a training school is needed to protect human health and animal health through control of livestock diseases."

Speech Department To Help Koreans

Korean refugees will get a large bundle of clothing from the Speech department this Christmas as a result of a Christmas party held Sunday by the department.

The party was held for professors and graduate assistants in the department and their wives. Instead of giving gifts, members donated clothing for the refugees.

Radio Guild to Stage Mock Radio Day

The Radio Guild will stage a practice Radio Day for two hours starting at 7 tonight in 304 Sparks.

The program, including short dramatic shows, is designed to aid new Guild members and give further experience to veteran members.

The program will not be broadcast, but the public may attend.

Dorm Proposal Turned Down

The Dean of Men's student advisory committee yesterday turned down the proposed plan to set up veterans' dormitories in the Nittany-Pollock area.

The results of a poll conducted among veterans showed that only about 50 per cent of the veterans in the Nittany-Pollock area were interested in moving from their own dormitories to an all-veteran dormitory. The poll, supervised by Matthew Halchin, counselor in Pollock, was conducted before the Thanksgiving vacation and reached all veterans in the East dormitory area. A second poll was conducted Friday and reached 75 per cent of the veterans in Pollock.

Continue Present Plan
In Friday's poll, 66 veterans were contacted. Of the 66, 36 said they were willing to move into an all-veteran dormitory, and 30 said they were not willing to move. Only 23 of the 36 who said they were willing to move wished to move immediately.

The committee decided to continue the plan which is now in effect for students who are extremely dissatisfied with dormitory study conditions. William Griffith, undergraduate dormitory counselor, said students who can not study in their dormitories should consult their dormitory counselors. The counselors are permitted to try to have the student transferred to another dormitory in the same area.

Wants 'Core' of Vets
Dean of Men Frank J. Simes said more veterans of the Korean War are expected next semester and next year. The committee decided that the expected influx of veterans would disturb dormitory organization and would provide too many complications if a policy of segregation were carried out.

Simes said that he hopes a "core" of veterans and older students can be set up in each dormitory in the future to help younger students entering college become accustomed to dormitory life.

The question of possible segregation and the subsequent poll were considered when complaints were made by veterans about noise in dormitories.

December 'Engineer'

The December issue of the Penn State Engineer will be on sale at the Corner Room and the Student Union desk today.

Shirley Mix, first semester physical education major, will be featured as this issue's Dream Girl. An article on the Fairless Steel Works is included.

December Froth Exchange Issue On Sale Today

In the Christmas gift-getting mood, this month's Froth, which goes on sale today on the Mall and at the Corner Room, borrows from other college humor publications.

It finds Froth Girl of the Month in its own ranks, however, and features Jean Kutz, Froth advertising candidate, decorating holiday shrubbery.

Other Froth features in the exchange issue include "Headline Havoc," an illustration of the confusion between War Department bulletins and newspaper reports; "Wish You Weren't Here," a letter from a guy to his ex-import explaining some unfortunate happenings of a big weekend; "America; It Is American," a parody on Life magazine editorials; "Dear Ed," a satirical letter on college life; "Merry Christmas, Eh?," suggested thank-you notes for unwanted presents; "Our Contemporaries View of the Assassination of Lincoln," a satirical glance at differing magazine reports; and "Alarum," featuring Shakespearean quotes in a contemporary situation.
