Committee Reviews Honesty in Exams

Cheating in examinations at the College is being studied by the subcommittee on academic honesty of the Senate committee on student affairs.

The committee's report on its findings will not be ready until at least next month, Gerhard E. Ehmann, associate professor of education and chairman of the committee, said yesterday, pointing to a pile of responses from other schools and organizations to questions about what they have done on academic honesty.

The judges will choose five finalists from the ten contestants and will select the first, second and third places from audience applause.

Violator Sent Before Dean

The case of a student who committed his third offense was sent to the dean of men by Tribunal last night, with the recommendation that he be put on office probation for the rest of the semester.

The student was reported illegally parked in the service drive of Hamilton Hall. He explained he was ill at the time and had intentions of taking the vehicle to pick up his ROTC uniform.

A second case involving illegal parking in a West Dorm service area resulted in a second offender being fined $2 and put on a two-week probation. He said he lived in Hamilton Hall but had a parking permit for the Nittany area. Chairman James Schulte pointed out that despite the inconvenience of such an arrangement, it is necessary to give preference to commuting students for campus permits near classrooms.

The court heard nine first and three second offenders. A total of $15 was levied in fines and two violators were given warnings.

Excuse Problem To Be Discussed

Goldin Sees Church Essential to Society

By PEGGY McCLAIN

If man is to have a stabilized society, he shall need religious institutions, Rabbi Judah Goldin said last night at the final of a series of Religion-in-Life Week lecture discussion panels. We cannot indulge in intellectual concepts of religion without relating these concepts to some religious institution, he said.

Rabbi Goldin spoke to a small audience on "The Student in the Church and Synagogue."

The concept that a student faces a problem in relation to his church is overemphasized, the Rabbi said. There is a problem of an individual's relation to his religion. Man makes use of religious institutions to relate himself with this problem. Students are included in this relation, but are not exclusive possessors of it, he said.

The Rabbi said that as a church or synagogue is made up of human beings, so will it suffer from all the limitations that other human institutions possess. The heartbreak is not that the church is less than superior to other communities, but that it does not always produce the best results from its raw material, he said.

In speaking of the laws and discipline that sectarian institutions impose on their members, the Rabbi said there is no organization in this world which, when taken seriously by its constituents, does not carry "do's" and "don't's." When a tradition tries to interfere with its people's lives, it proves interest in their welfare. A religious tradition that seems relaxed will evaporate, he said.

The danger of religion as a fashion is predominant today, Rabbi Goldin said. People are prepared to discuss their religion from a philosophical viewpoint. However, they are embarrassed when faced with the question of committing themselves to the laws of that institution's discipline, he said.

Identification with a church or synagogue should not serve as an ideal end, but as a representation of faith, the Rabbi said.

Regulations Are Questioned By Students

The problem of class excuses for students confined to their rooms while ill will be brought before the Senate committee on student affairs at its meeting tomorrow afternoon, Wilmer E. Kenworthy, director of student affairs, said yesterday.

Students have been questioning the practical application of an undergraduate regulation that allows official excuses for illness to be issued only to students confined in the Infirmary.

Students may be excused by instructors, according to the regulations, for illness not requiring hospital confinement. Such excuses are on an individual basis between student and instructor and depend on the student's presentation of his case and the instructor's policy.

Glenn Extends Help
Kenworthy said he did not believe that the new rules, instituted last year, are ineffective. The rules, having been passed by the College Senate, had the approval of instructors who are members of the Senate.

Dr. Herbert R. Glenn, director of the College Health Service, told students sent to their rooms to recuperate to report to him if they had trouble in getting excused by instructors of classes missed during the illness, Kenworthy said. He added that he has heard of no case in which a student has not been excused.

Kenworthy also said the College Health Service is admitting all students who are sufficiently ill, in their opinion, to require hospitalization. Those who are ill, but not enough to require confinement in the Infirmary, have been told to go to bed in their rooms.

Instructors Not Burdened
The ruling that no excuses be issued students sent to their rooms is not a Health Service ruling, but an undergraduate regulation set down by the Senate.

Kenworthy said that having an instructor rule on excuse-or-no-excuse for illness was not putting too much of a burden on the instructor.

Previous to adoption last year of the new rules on excuses, the College Health Service granted excuses to students for any illness, whether requiring hospital confinement or not. These excuses did not have to be honored by instructors as in the case of the present day official excuses issued to Infirmary patients.

Open Houses Set for May 2 By ISC Board

The College's undergraduate schools, with the exception of the Schools of Agriculture and Home Economics, will hold their combined open houses May 2, according to agreement by student council presidents at the Inter-School Coordinating Board.

The agriculture open house has been set for April 25, to supplement a livestock show planned for the same date. The home economics open house will take place April 17.

Suggestions for the joint school open house made by the board called for separate booklets to be printed for each school open house, and circulars publicizing each open house to be sent at the same time to high schools inviting juniors and seniors to attend.

The changing of the ISCB constitution so that a ninth member representing the proposed new business school, would be accepted on the council was also discussed. Douglas Schoerke, president of the Liberal Arts student council was named to make plans to be presented to ISCB concerning the tentative establishment of a constitution for the business school student council.
