ed, and when silence followed the announcement of the other two All-College office winners.

Lemyre Statement

Voting this year was done with voting machines which supplied the major answers to the election outcome by 6:15 last night. Last year the election returns were not known for almost six hours after the polls closed.

When informed that he had won the All-College presidency Lemyre said:

"This is one of the happiest moments I've ever experienced. I'm very grateful to the student body for the confidence they have bestowed upon me and I will try my utmost to uphold their expectations. I feel that more students took an interest in the campaigns this year and the State party organization and nominating system were definitely a step in the right direction. My only disappointment is that more students did not take the opportunity to vote."

Elections Committee

Carruthers said in part, "I wish Dick the best of luck and hope to be able to assist in student government in any way possible. There are good men in every office and if they put their party planks into operation they can do much for student government at Penn State."

Members of Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, and the Daily Collegian staff assisted the elections committee operate the polls. Members of the election committee are Richard Grossman, James Hand, David R. Jones, Edwin Kohn, Jane Mason, Diane Miller, Cordell Murtha, William Slepik, and Thorpe.

Thorpe had nothing but praise for the Automatic Voting Machine Corporation's representative Morgan Doolittle, who Thorpe said let the committee use his new station wagon with only 400 miles recorded on it to stage a "get out the vote" campaign with the aid of a public address system.

If tickets were completely sold out, no more persons would be admitted to the event. The plan is based on a seating capacity of 6000.

Students would be issued different colored tickets from the public so the tickets could not be sold. Only one ticket would be given to each student.

The proposed plan is set up to admit all students who want to
