2400 Enter Hat Contest

Approximately 2400 students have registered for the Mad Hatter's Day contest, Charles Gibbs, contest chairman, has announced.

The Mad Hatter's parade will form at 12:15 p.m. Tuesday beside McElwain Hall. Preliminary judging will take place at Schwab Auditorium. Numbers given to students registered in the contest will be checked from a master list. Ten points will be given for each registered contestant who wears a hat and his number in the parade.

Finals in the contest will begin at 7:45 p.m. following the carnival parade and the He-Man finals. Three $5 prizes will be awarded for hats judged most original, funniest, and most applicable to the theme. "Your favorite comic strip character." Three $3 prizes will be awarded to runnersup. First place winners will receive 100 points toward Spring Week totals for organizations they represent.

Medical Exam Set Tomorrow

The medical college admission test, required of students planning to enter medical school this fall, will be given at 9 a.m. tomorrow in 10 Sparks. Candidates will report at 8:45 and will be admitted only by showing the special ticket received with test applications. The test is being given by Educational Testing Service for the Association of American Medical Colleges.

Test results will be sent directly to the school designated as the applicant's choice. A second test will be given in November.

The exam consists of individual tests of general scholastic ability, understanding of modern society and achievement in science. No special preparation except a review of science subjects is necessary, according to Educational Testing Service.

3 Music Groups To Give Concert

Men's Glee Club, Varsity Quartet, and Hy-los, a comedy group, will present a concert at 3 p.m. Sunday in Schwab Auditorium.

The program will include selections presented at an April concert and a spring tour through five Pennsylvania and New York towns.

LaRue Durrwachter will be soloist. Eudell Korman, who accompanies the groups, will play a piano solo. Barry Smith will direct one selection. Frank Gullo, associate professor of music, directs the groups.

Page Twists 'Poor Old Will'

By HELEN LUYBEN

Pint-sized Pat Pool in the role of a page boy gives William Shakespeare a new twist in Players' "The Merry Wives of Windsor" which opened last night in Schwab Auditorium.

Pat reverses the Shakespearean tradition which has men play women's roles, and donning a suit of aqua quilted satin, plays Robin, 10-year old page to Sir John Falstaff, the rascal lover of Shakespeare's comedy.

Pat, 21, stands 4 feet 9 1/2 inches and hits big, bulky Sir John about four inches below his shoulder. In the play she hits him literally in the stomach. "I come swaggering out," Pat said, "to announce the entrance of Mistress Quickly (go-between for Sir John and the merry wives), make a deep bow and say, 'Sir, here's a woman would speak to you.'"

"Then I make a wide sweep with my arm and hit Falstaff smack on the stomach. And everybody at rehearsal laughs. I can't see how we look together but apparently it's funny. Falstaff, just glares down at me, and as I leave he leans over and gives me a smack on the seat of my pants."

Sir John is supposed to be Robin's idol, and the page's actions more or less imitate those of his master. So Pat swaggers, mimicking the lecherous lady-killer Falstaff. She swings her hips to mimic the overly plump Mistress and stamps her feet to interrupt Falstaff as he is about to embrace Mistress Ford after chasing her around the table.

It's a very saucy part, according to the senior sociology major. She said, "I like to act saucy for a change. People get the impression that small girls are quiet and demure." Pat admits to being quiet—"till you get to know me." But she loses all her inhibitions on the stage.

This is her first play at the College, although she played several roles in dramatics productions at Edinboro (where she was farmed out her freshman year) and in high school plays. She has done some radio work at home—Hickory Township—"where it doesn't matter how tall you are because the audience doesn't see you and I could play grown-up parts."

As Robin, Pat has a role to match her size. She speaks six times during the play and appears in five scenes. But each time she comes on stage and gets near big Sir John you're bound to notice her—if only by contrast in size.

Pat's imp size shocked the wardrobe crew when she went to be fitted for her costume. She weighs only 84 pounds, wears the equivalent of a size five dress in junior and misses sizes, and buys in children's shops what clothes her mother doesn't make.

In the play she wears an aqua quilted satin suit trimmed with bluish braid and a little white collar, white stockings, aqua satin shoes and a little round satin hat. All of the men in the cast wear stockings and britches ending at the knee. Men were all very vain about their legs at that time and liked to show them off in pretty silk stockings.

According to Pat, at an early rehearsal Director Walter H. Walters had all the men in the cast roll up their pants legs to get a look at the stock he had to work with and ended by suggesting they try padding some of the skinnier legs.

Pat had to learn to stand, walk and bow like a boy for her role as the page. She demonstrated the stance—left leg stiff, right leg flexed with the foot pointed out to the side. The bow brings the left foot back; her body bends at the waist and her right hand makes a grand sweep.

When she doffs the page's costume and short pageboy hair style she's adopted for the play, Pat is decidedly feminine. She prefers to date tall men—"because I feel taller with them." Grinning broadly she added, "I've always been kidded about being short so I'm used to it by now. I just say, 'No, I'm not short; I'm just standing in a hole,' and forget about it."

Wisconsin Prof Will Present Psych Lecture

Dr. Harry F. Harlow, professor of psychology at the University of Wisconsin, will present the second lecture in the Distinguished Lecturer Series in psychology at 8 p.m. Monday in 10 Sparks.

The Department of Psychology and the Graduate School sponsor the series, which is open to the public.

Dr. Harlow received his bachelor and doctoral degrees at Stanford University. He is a member of the faculty at Wisconsin where he developed the Wisconsin laboratory of primate behavior.

Recognized for his work with the learning processes in monkeys, Dr. Harlow has been successful in relating learning behavior to the function of certain parts of the brain.

He is a member of the National Academy of Science and the Society of Experimental Psychologists and past president of the Division of Experimental Psychology, American Psychological Association.

In 1950-1951 he served as scientific adviser to the Department of the Army in Washington, D.C.

Flying Club Officers

New officers of the Flying Club are William Fehr, president; Barry Drew, vice president; and Arlan Temeles, secretary. The club will continue operation during the summer session.

State X-ray Unit Examines 1400 In Three Days

Approximately 600 persons were given free chest X-rays yesterday bringing to 1400 the total number of students, College employees, and townspeople X-rayed since the unit arrived here Tuesday.

Three-hundred persons were X-rayed Tuesday and more than 500 received X-rays yesterday. The mobile unit left last night for Pittsburgh.

The unit was brought to campus by the College Health Service in cooperation with the tuberculosis control division of the Pennsylvania Department of Health.

Engineers Elect Landis

Ivan Landis was recently elected chairman of the student branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. Others elected are Walter Kowalik, vice chairman; Robert Stamm, secretary; and Rodney Beck, treasurer.
