

Liberal Arts

Ben Euwema

The primary objective of the School of Liberal Arts is to prepare students for intelligent and responsible participation in the complex, chaotic world of the twentieth century. The emphasis is upon the general education of the student rather than upon his vocational or pre-professional training.

If this aim seems impractical, be assured that the impracticality of it is more apparent than real. As all our leading medical and law schools now realize, a general, liberal education deals with those skills and attitudes which underlie all the professions and vocations.

Two factors are most significant in this connection. First, most students have different vocations ultimately from those they started to prepare for as freshmen in college. And, second, all vocations, however technical or specialized, require certain basic, liberal skills, such as the ability to think straight and to communicate accurately and clearly; a certain general intellectual history of the world; and a sense of values, such as is implicit in the appreciation of the arts, in ethics, and in philosophy.

Dean's Group Acts as Link

The student advisory committee of the Dean of Men's office is a direct link between men students and the administration of the College.

Meetings are usually held every other week in the Dean of Men's office. Sessions provide the opportunity for students and administration to hear both sides of an issue affecting men students at the College, according to Dean of Men Frank J. Simes.

The group of student leaders usually numbers 14 to 20, including All-College officers, presidents of dormitory areas, Interfraternity Council officers, editor of the Daily Collegian, chairman of Hat Society Council and Tribunal chairman.

Discussions of present College policy are held with criticisms presented.

Faculty members and administrative representatives are invited to speak on topics of general interest to the student body.

Education

Marion R. Trabue

It is an honor to be admitted as a freshman to the School of Education, and it is an equal honor for me to have this opportunity to welcome you. I hope that all of us may accept fully the responsibilities that go with our honors.

You may not be aware that scores of other high school graduates who wanted to enter the School of Education this fall could not be admitted because we do not have enough faculty members, office space, and other facilities to provide for them. We regret that these other applicants could not be admitted, but we congratulate you who are with us. We shall do our best to help you to prepare for your chosen profession, and we shall expect you to succeed.

Now that you are here, we hope that you will apply your time and energy to three lines of development. First of all, you should do everything possible to develop your general knowledge and skills as a mature American citizen. Second, you should deepen your scholarship in the special subjects that you will later use in your life's work. Third, you should try in every way possible to develop the professional insights and skills required in working effectively with individuals and groups of people. A teacher or a psychologist, to be successful, must acquire in college as much as possible in all three of these areas of development. Our faculty is ready and anxious to help you in your efforts.

We are really glad to have you with us, and we wish you the greatest possible success, both here on the campus and in your later professional life.

MARION R. TRABUE, Dean

Trustees Accept Grants

Ten grants, totaling over $40,000, to support research projects and fellowships at the College, were accepted by the Board of Trustees at its June meeting.

Chemistry-Physics

George L. Haller

Each year we enjoy welcoming the students of the School of Chemistry and Physics who are new to the campus.

The needs of industry and the armed establishments have emphasized the shortages of well trained personnel in the fields of chemistry and physics. The knowledge that you are training for professions of importance to the welfare of the country, and in which there is a great need for competent men and women, should add to your interest and enthusiasm for the work.

In connection with both their teaching and research activities the staff of the school is in close contact with the groups needing help. This cooperation serves as an inspiring influence to student and staff alike.

We urge you to make the best possible use of your time while in college. You will find that your student council is working for your interests and welcomes your cooperation.

Council Forms New Honorary

The newest women's hat society on campus, the as yet unnamed senior women's activities honorary, was established last year by Hat Society Council.

Twenty-four sixth and seventh semester women were tapped by the council in recognition of their 1.5 or better All-College average and active participation in one major or several minor activities.

Women tapped for the new society have not formerly been tapped by Cwens or Chimes. The new society was formed to cite women who became active in their junior year and who might not have attained the necessary All-College average for eligibility for Mortar Board.

The group will elect officers this fall.

Frosh Women to Live In Pollock Dormitory

The arrival today of approximately 675 freshman women will begin an influx of women students that is expected to overflow regular dormitories into additional quarters formerly occupied by men.

Increased women's enrollment will necessitate using Pollock Circle Dormitory 10 which was used in past years for men's housing.

This marks the second time in three years that a men's dorm has been converted. Thompson Hall in the West Dorm area originally housed men students.

College housing capacity for women students is 2349. They are housed in Thompson, Atherton, McAllister, Simmons, and McElwain Halls, Grange Dormitory, Woman's Building, several cottages, and three home economics home management cottages. To handle additional students, the College is expected to open another home management house and will probably utilize several dormitory lounges temporarily.

Mrs. Cordelia L. Hibbs, assistant to the dean of women, said it is hoped none of the extra housing units in the lounges or Pollock 10 will have to be used for more than a semester. Their occupants will be absorbed into regular dormitories when other students drop out of school or leave for student teaching posts at the end of the first eight weeks, she said.

Freshman students will be housed in Thompson, McAllister, and Atherton Halls, Woman's Building, cottages, and the Pollock dorm. Other units will be used by upperclasswomen, including about 300 transfer students.

Women living in cottages, Woman's Building, and Grange will eat in McAllister Hall dining room. Those living in Pollock 10 will have their meals in the McElwain Hall dining room. Mail for women in Pollock 10 will be received at McElwain post office, but will be delivered to the dorm.

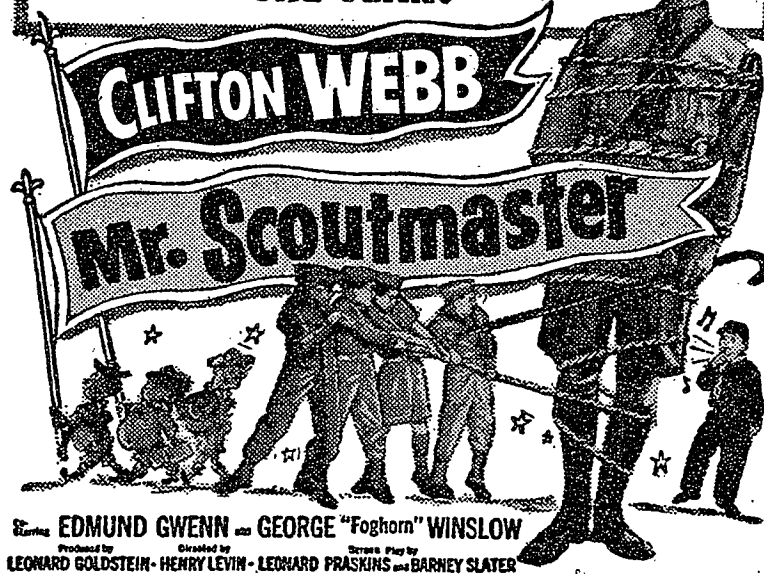

Dormitories have access to laundry and drying facilities. Some have lounges in addition to main lobbies. Some have kitchenettes, and all but the Pollock dorm have recreation rooms. Individual rooms are furnished with beds and linen, desks, chairs, bureaus, and study lamps.

Prof Gets Federal Post

Dr. Leonard F. Miller, professor of farm management, has been appointed by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson to serve on the department's national committee on production and economics.
