

All-College Cabinet Regulates Student Activities, Levies Fees

All-College Cabinet is the highest student government body at the College. It regulates student activities, levies fees with the consent of the College Senate and Board of Trustees, and acts as a coordinating agent between administration and students.

Cabinet is required to meet at least every two weeks by its constitution. Any student may attend a cabinet meeting in the Trustee's room, 201 Old Main. Meetings are usually held at 8 p.m. Thursday. The time and place of meetings are announced in the Daily Collegian, and an agenda is printed. Records of meetings are open to students, and cabinet activities are reported in the Collegian.

This year cabinet will operate on a budget of $12,300.

Presiding over cabinet is All-College President Richard Lemyre, seventh semester metallurgy major. He is assisted by All-College Vice President Edward Haag, seventh semester journalism major, and All-College Secretary-Treasurer David Arnold, seventh semester commerce major. Haag's duties as vice president include coordinating Cabinet Projects Council and the National Student Association.

All-College and class officers are elected by a political party system, similar to that of Pennsylvania's state electoral system.

Presidents of the nine student councils—Agriculture, Business, Chemistry and Physics, Education, Engineering, Home Economics, Liberal Arts, Mineral Industries and Physical Education—have seats on cabinet. Problems sometimes are referred by cabinet to the Interscholar Council Board, composed of school council presidents.

Class presidents have seats on cabinet. Freshman and Sophomore class officers will be elected within the next two months.

Fraternity, sorority, and independent men and women are represented on cabinet. Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council presidents represent fraternity men and sorority women. Presidents of the Association of Independent Men and Leonides represent the independent men and women students.

Additional women representatives are the presidents of Women's Student Government Association and Women's Recreation Association. President of the men's Athletic Association is also a member of cabinet.

Two other cabinet members are the chairman of the Board of Publications, who is editor of the Daily Collegian, and the chairman of the Board of Dramatics and Forensics.

Two Renamed to Direct Penn State Foundation

Two directors of the Penn State Foundation, whose one-year terms expired June 30, have been renamed.

They are H. Thomas Hallowell Jr., Rydal, elected for a five-year term as a representative of the Board of Trustees of the College, and George A. Doyle, Philadelphia, elected representative of the Penn State Alumni Association for a four-year term.

Student CPC Aids Cabinet In Workshops

Cabinet Projects Council was established last fall by All-College Cabinet to assist in administrative duties and to lessen the load of details carried by cabinet members.

Many proposals brought before cabinet are referred to CPC for investigation. CPC committees study the problem and make recommendations to cabinet. Before CPC was established, it was necessary for the All-College president to name an investigating committee, usually headed by a cabinet member, to look into the problem.

CPC is a workshop where student interests and ability in student government leadership can be developed. Explanations of CPC and the work it is now doing will be given during Orientation Week meetings, Irvin White, president, has announced.

CPC projects last year included: 1. An Orientation Week evaluation committee which questioned last year's freshmen on the effectiveness of Orientation Week activities. Many suggestions re-

Ag School Sponsors Honoraries, Clubs

Many clubs and honoraries are sponsored by departments in the School of Agriculture to give students a chance to participate in work relating to their curriculum and to honor students who have maintained high scholastic averages.

Four honoraries, Pi Alpha Xi, horticulture; Xi Sigma Pi, forestry; Alpha Tau Alpha, agriculture education; and Gamma Sigma Delta, agriculture, are in the School of Agriculture. They are designed to honor students with high scholastic averages who have shown interest in the plans and programs of the group. They plan and carry out field days, exhibitions and contests sponsored on Ag Hill. Each group holds a banquet for active members, alumni, faculty and guests. Xi Sigma Pi annually sponsors the Forestry Ball.

Coaly Society, agriculture honorary, sponsors an annual Ag Honor Day at which the Mr. Agriculture of Penn State award is presented to an outstanding senior. He is selected on the basis of extra-curricular activities in agricultural fields. Any agriculture student may make a nomination. The recipient receives a medal, plow and cash award.

Agriculture Student Council holds an Ag Party every year for faculty members and students. Scholarship awards and prizes are presented. Dinner guests at the banquet are chosen from outstanding people in the field. Agriculture products of all kinds are displayed. Money received from the party is used to further agriculture in some undeveloped country. The Apple Jack Jump is co-sponsored with Home Economics Student Council in November. Proceeds are used to establish a scholarship.

Almost every department and some sub-departments have a club for students to meet and discuss problems, hear guest speakers and work on field days and exhibitions. Clubs sponsor field days, tournaments, picnics, parties, contests and live stock, vegetable, and flower shows, panel discussions, turkey shoots, broadcasts and square dances.

General Agriculture Club is open to students enrolled in agriculture.

The School of Agriculture annually sponsors a speaking contest with a $5000 fund set up by Mrs. Paul Goulden in memory of her husband. The contest is open to undergraduates in the school. Judges are chosen from the faculty of the Agriculture and Speech departments.

The Ag Hill Breeze is published every two weeks. News of organizations on Ag Hill and coming events is published in the paper.
