

McCain, Starbuck Join PSCA Staff

Miss Elizabeth McCain and the Rev. Robert B. Starbuck have recently joined the staff of the Penn State Christian Association. Miss McCain, a graduate of Texas Technological College and holder of a Danforth Foundation fellowship, has been assigned by the foundation to the Penn State chapter to assist with student religious activities.

The "Danny Grad" program, under which Miss McCain will work with the PSCA, place 16 college women each year on college campuses. These women are selected for academic ability, leadership qualities, and religious devotion.

Penn Graduate

While at Texas Tech, Miss McCain was active in student-faculty groups, youth and adult choirs, the college student council, and her sorority, Delta Delta Delta.

The Rev. Starbuck, who joins the CA staff as Evangelical and Reformed Minister and program associate of PSCA, was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1950 and received his Bachelor of Divinity degree from Yale Divinity School this year.

While a student at Penn, Starbuck was chairman of the United Student Fellowship and a member of the Christian Association cabinet. Majoring in philosophy, he was tapped by Phi Beta Kappa.

Religious Conferences

At Yale Divinity School, he was active in the New England and national interseminary movement. He majored in theology, social ethics, religion, and higher education.

While at Penn and Yale, Starbuck attended five religious conferences, and for his field work at Yale served as adviser to the Teachers College of Connecticut Christian Fellowship.

Fraternity Pins May Symbolize Local Jail Bars

By SHIRLEY MUSGRAVE

A moon, a girl and boy, and a fraternity pin. The boy offers the pin to the girl. She accepts. Simple, romantic, or is it? But just a word of warning before you take that bejeweled symbol of Greek brotherhood.

Would you want it if you could be hauled to jail for wearing it? For, according to an enterprising young law student, who has poked about the Idaho state law books, wearing the pin of a Greek letter fraternity is a crime, a misdemeanor no less. But do pins have to be worn? It would look lovely on your bulletin board.

Not romantic? But how romantic would you feel if you were on the inside looking out of the local jail? Where would your tender thoughts be if you had to hand over $200 bail to get out of the place?

For this same law states any non-member of a fraternity who wears its pin shall be punished by imprisonment for 90 days or a fine of $200, or both.

This world's in an awful state when all a guy has to do to get rid of a girl is give her his pin. Comes the big moment. She's dewy-eyed, John hands it over—then runs for the nearest policeman hollering she's a criminal. —Maybe he has something at that!

But back to this word of warning. Fall is here. And though any time is pinning time, fall is THE time. So before you knock yourself out reaching for that bit of metal, just take a gander at the Pennsylvania statute books.

Your Johnny would certainly never have an ulterior motive? But how do you know?

New Hat Group Meets Sunday

Members of the new senior women's hat society, as yet not formally organized, will meet with the group adviser, Miss Mary Jane Wyland, at 7 p.m. Sunday at her home, 251 W. Park avenue.

The new group, tapped last year by Hat Society Council, has not yet chosen a name or elected officers. The meeting on Sunday will be an organizational one at which officers will be elected and discussion held on choosing a name for the group.

The new hat society was created last spring by Hat Society Council to honor outstanding senior women in activities. This will be the first formal meeting held by the new group.

Brown Appointed Chorus Director

Raymond H. Brown, assistant professor of music, has been appointed voice instructor and director of the Penn State Women's Chorus, replacing Herbert W. Beattie.

Brown was private vocal instructor from 1949 to 1953 in Baltimore and Hagerstown, Md. He received his B.S. degree from Johns Hopkins University in 1951.

Statistics Show Soldiers 'Satisfied'

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22 (AP)—My, my, how the Army must have changed!

For the Adjutant General's office has come up with a survey which purports to show that today's soldier: (a) is satisfied with his job; (b) thinks he is doing the work for which he was trained; and (c) believes his chores are necessary.

The survey was made of 4000 enlisted men leaving the service. And the answers may surprise those who may have felt the Army could be divided into two classes: the eager few who are anxious to get ahead at all costs, and the majority who like to drag their heels at all costs.

But the adjutant general's questioners asked:

How satisfied were you with your Army job?

The draftees answered: very satisfied, 18 per cent; satisfied, 57 per cent; dissatisfied, 16 per cent, and very dissatisfied, 7 per cent.

The regular Army boys voted the same, only more so. Twenty-four per cent said they were very satisfied.

And so it went.

Do you feel your job was necessary to the Army? Yes, almost all of it was necessary, said 66 per cent.

Did you spend most of your time working on the job for which you were trained? Yes, most of the time, said 61 per cent.

A Pentagon public relations man was asked if he could explain this cheery attitude. He said he couldn't.

“But I do think this griping business is given more emphasis than it deserves,” he said. “Everybody in the Army gripes. I was talking to a general the other day, and he was griping.”

“A soldier will gripe about the outfit he's in, and then when he's put in another outfit, he spends all his time saying what a great bunch of guys the fellows in his old outfit were.”

“Now you take me. I'm working on a field manual, and of all the lousy—”

After several well chosen expressions, the P. R. man finally reached his conclusion: “Griping is the soldier's national pastime.”

Women Enlist In ROTC Unit At Rutgers U.

Who said it was a man's world? Even ROTC is fast losing its masculinity to the pioneering college coed.

Skirts actually invaded the calm, pipe-smoke filled air of one of the nation's oldest men's colleges, Rutgers University, when attractive 19-year-old Eve Winant joined the gang and decided to enroll in advanced AFROTC.

A junior home economics transfer from Gettysburg College, Miss Winant went along with eight of her scheming young friends and enrolled in the school's two-year basic ROTC course.

“Some girls took it just to get out of gym,” she explained. But not Miss Winant. She yearned for the technical excitement of aeronautical classes (subjects like jet engines), and her old fashioned home economics curriculum hardly fit the bill.

However, Miss Winant will not get the full benefit of her new education. Unlike the 105 men enrolled in the course, she will not receive payment from the government, nor does she get a uniform. Only a certificate awaits her at the end of the four-year course.

Instead of receiving a commission in the Air Force Reserve, she has only the hope that her certificate might get her a commission in the Women's Air Force in the event she decides the life of a homemaker is not for her.

But her fellow students do not have to extend too much sympathy to Miss Winant for her feminine disadvantages. The fellows may get paid for their time, but this clever female saves her arches. There's no marching for the gals.

Glancing Around—

up the fresh morsel. It reminded me of my days in the Nittany dining hall.

The subject of food reminds me of the doggie roast that was held. Although why the sight of some of the roasted dogs should remind me of food will probably remain a mystery. One of the more disgustingly civilized members of the encampment brought regular roasting forks. The rest of us used straightened clothes hangers.

To those of us who burned the paint off the hangers first, there was little difference except for a matter of tidiness. To those who prefer paint with their hot dogs, that's fine.

Burning hot dogs requires a talent of sorts. There is a definite knack to always being in the direction of the smoke while being careful to leave the hot dog directly in the flame long enough to scorch it beyond recognition.

A final word for those who may attend next year's encampment, be sure to prevent getting your hot dogs mixed with your grasshoppers. The trout might complain.
