

Gift of Senior Class of 1903

NEW CAMPUS GATEWAY, a gift of the Class of 1903, was dedicated this summer on the 50th reunion of the class.

The gateway, on the corner of Atherton street and Pollock road, was presented to the College by George W. Deike, a member of the Class of 1903 and vice president of the Board of Trustees.

The gateway consists of two pylons of limestone, each 22 feet high. Sculptured heads of the Nittany Lion are mounted near the tops of the pylons. Curved walls of native stone flank the columns and simple limestone benches have been constructed inside the curved walls.

The inscription on each pylon reads: "In deep gratitude to our Alma Mater, Class of 1903—50th Reunion—June 13, 1953."

the necessary constitutional amendments are approved by cabinet the present Tribunal organization would continue to handle traffic cases until the court is established and prepared to function, Farrell said.

Pragmatic philosophy reasons that "if it works, it's good."

Over 100 freshman women living in McAllister Hall made a tour of the upperclasswomen's dorms last night to serenade them in an enthusiastic display of school spirit.

Led by one or two girls, the group sang several school songs in front of each dorm and ended with a loud cheer. Atherton, Simmons, McElwain, and Grange were visited by the group.

Freshman women still complained yesterday about lack of strong customs enforcement by hatwomen and upperclasswomen.

Freshman men are running hatmen and writers of customs regulations a close match. One frosh, reprimanded by a hatman for running across a campus lawn, told the hatman customs regulations said "no walking on campus grass." He was "legally" running.

Another ingenious frosh put a group of upperclassmen to an intelligence test yesterday. After answering a blast of questions

Players will hold their annual shindig for newcomers to Penn State's drama world at 7 p.m. tomorrow in Schwab Auditorium.

This get-acquainted night will give new students a chance to talk with senior managers, explore the auditorium's facilities, and get full information concerning Player membership.

Those interested in participating in the forthcoming production, Noel Coward's "Hay Fever," may sign for tryouts.
