

Stock Team Ranks First In Judging

Penn State's livestock judging team nearly forced seven opposing groups out of the running as it racked up a total of 4270 points to finish in first place far ahead of last year's winner, Ohio State. The team appeared in its first intercollegiate competition of the school year at the Eastern States Livestock Exposition at Springfield, Mass.

The only woman on the local team, Marion Cullen of Georgetown, R.I., ranked first in beef cattle judging and tied for first place in the horse division, emerging as high-scorer of the exposition. A third first-place was earned for the team in the sheep judging contest by Robert Herr, Lancaster.

The team swept the field in the team competitions, ranking first in all four: beef cattle, horses, swine, and sheep. Individual scoring found five Penn Staters among the first seven. After Miss Cullen, Paul Stone ranked third, Herr, fifth; William Sipple, sixth; and Peter Fenchak tied for seventh.

Second place in the competition went to Ohio State, followed by Cornell, University of Massachusetts, and Rutgers University. Three other schools competed.

Penn State will also compete next month in the American Royal Livestock Show at Kansas City, the International Livestock Exposition at Chicago, and at the Eastern National Livestock Exposition, Timonium, Md., in November.

Harshbarger, College chaplain said.

Instead of being the ultimate goal of the project's sponsors, the meditation chapel will be the first step in the construction of a new religious center on campus.

The chapel will be integrated into a program office building serving as a center for the Penn State Christian Association and coordinating space for student religious organizations. The building would include a library, recreation room, and auditorium, according to present plans.

The final goal would be the construction of a large chapel seating approximately 2000 persons. This would eliminate the use of Schwab Auditorium for religious services and would complete the project of a new religious center.

The location of such a center is still in the nebulous stage with suggestions for the use of the present Armory site, Holmes Field, or Ag Hill.

ber, workshop chairman. Ways to promote greater interest in the Community Forum and Honors Day will be included in these recommendations. Proposals on Religion-in-Life Week, and the establishment by the College of a chair in religion, will also be given by Garber.

Other recommendations from Garber will include a proposal for a film on activities and the development of basic social courtesies on the campus. Under the recommendations of this last category will be the proposal for the dress of West Dorm men at evening meals to include coats and ties. Another proposal is the establishment of an inquiry to determine the possibility of coed exchange dinners in the Nittany-Pollock area.

Chest Plans Listed

The approval by cabinet of the requirement for Sunday noon dress, issued last week by the Dean of Men's office, will be presented to cabinet by Ross Clark, chairman of the resident counselor workshop.

Campus Chest recommendations will include the plans for days sick leave that had been granted to all College employees. Other advances for the good of the employees that he listed included a recent average wage increase of $15 a month, naming Armistice Day a holiday, and increasing vacations to 12 working days for those with less than ten years service and 18 working days for those with more.

This last plan caused much consternation among the technical and service employees as the clerical employees still receive 24 working days of vacation. Hostetter explained that this must remain to compensate for lack of other benefits under the new College policy which other employees receive.

this year's chest drive, and the naming of committees, who must be approved by cabinet. Richard Gibbs, Chest workshop chairman, will present the report.

The proposal for a Traffic Court, suggested by the judicial workshop at the encampment, will be presented by Tribunal Chairman Thomas Farrell. Details of the court, its composition and duties, was worked out at a meeting of Tribunal Monday night.
