

New Wing of Pattee Library

NEW LIBRARY WING is now in the final stages of construction. Work on the new unit was started in August, 1951. This view shows the northwest exposure which features a wall of glass. The new wing is constructed of brick and limestone and is designed to harmonize with the original section of the library which was built 15 years ago.

Unit to Increase Library Space

Stack capacity will be tripled and study facilities doubled when the new unit to the Pattee Library is completed and opened for business.

The new wing, in its 25th month of construction, will be opened as soon as the General State Authority inspectors give their official go-ahead. The wing has already undergone a pre-final construction examination.

Ralph W. McComb, librarian, said the new wing will swell the total working capacity to nearly 600,000 volumes. McComb said the new stacks on the ground floor alone will provide facilities for as many books as are currently crowded into the stacks of the original building.

Graduate students and faculty will be provided study facilities with the addition of 168 carrels to the 60 now located in the library and the opening of six small rooms for students.

Four large reading rooms will be located in the new wing to provide study facilities for more than 400 students.

The east and west reading rooms on the first floor will be entered from a central room, formed by the removal of two partitions and a corridor between the former newspaper room and the open shelf reserve room. A similar arrangement will be found on the second floor where the new west room with adjoining stacks will be used for periodicals.

The main circulation desk will be moved to the east room on the second floor. Chairs and tables in this room will provide working space for students using books that may not be taken from the library.

A pneumatic tube system from the main circulation desk to the stacks will provide transmission of requests for books and a book conveyor will automatically carry books to the desk. Two book lifts also have been added to handle larger numbers of books.

The new stacks, which are located on six levels of the wing, are composed of 23,000 movable shelves. The steel support uprights are also removable so sections of the stack area may be cleared for other uses.

The new wing, of masonry and steel construction cost $1.2 million.

Faculty members will be asked to designate their funds to any of the following organizations: Penn State Christian Association, World University Service, Penn State Student Scholarship Fund, and WSGA Christmas Fund.

The Penn State Scholarship fund, which was included as a member organization in the Encampment Report, was removed from the list of groups covered by an amendment to the resolution. The fund provides financial aid to athletes, and a majority of the cabinet members felt that a charity drive of the Campus Chest type should not contribute to a small group of students. The 5 per cent of the undesignated contributions assigned to the fund was included in the Penn State
