Van Fleet --

people have carried on remarkably, he said.

And it is this country's responsibility to see to it that Korea remains free, Van Fleet declared. "In a sense, Korea is our baby. It must succeed and it has every right to succeed," the former commander said.

Praise for the United Nations forces was expressed by the military leader. "Unfortunately, he said, there were only 16 nations fighting" in the first collective action to halt aggression, "when there should have been 50."

The general also warned that America "must be ready for the worst. Now is no time to coast along."

"Good allies are needed," he said. "We have good allies asking only for weapons. They are not asking for men. They tell us 'we are willing to fight for freedom'. We must help them," he said.

The South Koreans are "ready to march north at any time," Van Fleet reported.

The American soldier in Korea behaved splendidly, he declared. GI's have given $20 million from their paychecks for Korean relief, he said. "This is one of the acts which sustained Korea," he declared.

The First Corps raised $100,000 for a wing in a hospital for the care of crippled children.

The ROK made an excellent soldier, according to Van Fleet. Serving side by side with American foot soldiers, the Koreans had everything the American had, he said, except the pay, the candy bars, and the cigarettes. And, "there was no rotation for them."

Van Fleet said he had no answer to the "sixty-four dollar question: Will peace come to Korea? I do not know. I cannot offer a solution. We must be ready for the worst."
