

Employment Agency Offers Varied Work

By HERM WEISKOPF

How would you like to get paid for babysitting with a cat? This is only one of the many job requests that have been filled by John Huber, head of the Student Employment Service. Other odd job requests that have been handled include:

A call for two boys to chop wood for a barbeque. The job itself was not odd, but the lady wanted the boys to bring their own axes. It may be true that some Penn State males walk around campus with pocket knives, but it is doubtful if they carry axes.

A request for a boy to sit with some furs. It seems there was a fur convention at the Nittany Lion Inn and the furriers wanted someone to watch the expensive furs when they were not around.

A girl who wanted a job as a spot welder.

A boy with medical experience who desired to work as a surgeon's assistant.

These and many other odd jobs have been filled by the Student Employment Service.

Students Can Find Work

"The point I am trying to bring out," Huber explained, "is that if any students have unusual talents, or can perform different jobs, we may be able to find work for them."

Huber emphasized that students must decide now whether they can "afford" to work. Students must go into the office and fill out application cards containing data needed by the Student Employment Service. This information includes a class schedule, how much financial assistance is needed, and what types of work the student can do.

At present about 750 students have filed cards with the office, Huber said. However, he estimated that about 20 per cent of these students will not accept jobs. The main reason is that they find that working cuts down the number of hours they have left for studying, he explained.

Should Call Employer

The main job of the Student Employment Service is "to help finance needy students," Huber said.

He added that if a student is unable to fill a job commitment he should call not only the employer but also Huber's office. No student is forced to take any job, Huber said. It is the privilege of the student to decline any job if he so desires.

The biggest complaint from employers, according to Huber, stems from the fact that some students accept a job and then fail to show up for work. This in turn causes hard feelings between townspeople and students at the College. Huber explained that students who accept jobs in town are acting as emissaries of the student body.

This summer the Student Employment Service contacted camps and resorts in 14 states and Canada and provided Penn Staters with over 1000 summer jobs, Huber said.

If you would like to put some of your talent to work and earn a few extra dollars, sign up with the Student Employment Service, 112 Old Main.

Clothing Drive Set to Begin

Phi Kappa Psi and Chi Omega are sponsoring "State College in Korea" week, a used clothing drive starting tomorrow and ending Friday. Donations can be turned in between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the Old Print Shop on Beaver avenue.

Warm bedding and clothing, including sweaters, jackets, socks, blankets, shoes, heavy trousers and dresses are especially needed.

Impeachment --

tacted by Kohn concerning the meeting. The announcement was then amended by Favro to say that the meeting had been approved by the chairman of the elections committee.

Donald Herbein, defeated by Sinclair for the chairmanship of the party Oct. 11, asked that the women sit apart from the general body.

Sinclair, in a statement issued yesterday, said "The clique chairman is the only person having the right to call party meetings. There should be no doubt as to who is the Lion Party chairman, and all meetings called by unauthorized persons are illegal."

Reasons Listed for Charge

The formal impeachment charge was read to the clique by Robert Howe, first semester mechanical engineering major. The reading of the charge was preceded by Kidd's reading to the meeting of sections of Robert's Rules of Order applying to impeachment proceedings. Kidd charged that Sinclair was dodging prosecution by refusing to recognize the validity of Robert's Rules.

Kidd said the impeachment charges were based on the fact that Sinclair had appointed two men to the position designated in the party's constitution for one man, and had made appointments without the consent of all clique officers as designated in the constitution.

The formal impeachment charges Sinclair with "unscrupulous conduct detrimental to the good name and intentions of the Lion Party."

Trial Committee Meets

Sinclair referred to the charges as "nebulous." "They have disintegrated under their own weight, a fact which demonstrates their complete lack of truth," Sinclair said.

The charges presented at the meeting were formulated by a trial committee which met in the West Dorm conference room Sunday afternoon. The trial meeting followed meetings held last Tuesday at Beta Theta Pi and Thursday at Kappa Delta Rho where freshmen presented charges that Sinclair had promised them support in their races for freshman class offices. Clique nomination for candidates will be held Nov. 1.

Sinclair was appointed temporary clique chairman of the party Sept. 22, replacing Watson Leese, who resigned. Kidd, a former member of the radio station staff who reentered politics to oppose Sinclair, said under the old constitution the power of the clique chairmanship rested with him after Richard Kirschner resigned the chairmanship last spring, but approved of Leese's appointment as temporary clique chairman.

visory council to the president of AIM, who would be popularly elected.

The advisory council would be composed of the executive board of AIM, the standing committee chairman, and the area presidents. This group would meet bi-monthly.

LA Deadline Extended

The deadline for freshman Liberal Arts students to return their petitions for seats on the Liberal Arts Student Council has been extended to 5 p.m. Thursday.

LA freshmen who wish to petition may secure blanks at the LA office, 133 Sparks. The petitions must be returned to the LA office Thursday with at least 25 names of LA freshmen. A picture of the petitioner should be attached to the returned form.
