

Mortar Board Holds Mardi Gras Friday

The annual Mardi Gras, sponsored by Mortar Board, senior women's hat society, will be held from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m. Friday in Recreation Hall. General admission charge will be 15 cents.

Highlight of the evening will be the crowning of a king of the Mardi Gras. Fifteen candidates have been entered in the contest.

Pictures of the candidates are on display downtown in a window of McLanahan's drug store.

The king will receive a gift certificate from Jack Harper's clothing store and will be honored at the Mardi Ball Saturday night.

One Night in New Orleans
The Mardi Ball, sponsored by Chimes, junior women's hat society, will be held from 9 p.m. to midnight at the Temporary Union Building. It is an informal version of the traditional ball held in honor of the two kings of the famous New Orleans Mardi Gras carnival.

Although the New Orleans version is held immediately after the carnival, and lasts all night, the Chimes' Mardi Ball will be held the following night in accordance with College regulations.

Admission charge for the dance, at which Jack Jenkins and his orchestra will play, will be $1.50 per couple.

Dancing, refreshments, games and variety shows will be presented by the 21 booths being organized for the carnival by sororities, Leonides and Freshman Council.

Vote At Booths

Proceeds from the carnival booths and the voting for Mardi Gras king will go into the Charlotte E. Ray Scholarship Fund, a project of Mortar Board. Miss Ray is a former dean of women at the College.

Voting for kings will take place at the booths of sponsoring organizations with one penny counting as one vote.

King candidates have been asked by Jane Mason, a Mardi Gras committee chairman, to be present at Rec Hall at 11 p.m. Friday. The winning candidate will be crowned at 11:30 p.m.

AOPI Retires Cup

A circulating bronze cup will be presented to the organization collecting the greatest number of tickets sold by Mortar Board. Theta Phi Alpha won the cup last year.

The cup is retired by a sorority winning the contest for tickets three years in succession. Alpha Omicron Pi won the cup the three years preceding the win by Theta Phi Alpha.

one, regardless of party affiliation, could vote. This didn't give old Bob control over the primaries, but with his personality, who needed it? There is one other point; no other organization could get him out either.

When he left the governorship and entered the U.S. Senate, the old finger was still in the state pie. The result was that young Bob came into the picture and lasted until the state of Wisconsin apparently got tired of the name LaFollette. Then it chose young Joe to replace young Bob in the Senate. And another, bigger and better, headliner was born.

Women Steal Men's Shirts For Fashion

The male has been outdone again. While fashion magazines have been publishing headlines about the colorful new trend in men's clothes, the females quietly have stolen one of the men's oldest traditions—the shirt.

Men's shirts—from sober white to vivid prints and stripes—are appearing in classes and business offices all over the country. Merchants suddenly found a demand for which there was no supply this fall and had to send hurried orders for shirts to stock their shelves.

As in any new fashion trend, everyone tried to get into the act. Jewelers manufactured fancy gold and silver safety pins to wear at the neck, cuff link sales went way up and special starches for stiffening collars and cuffs went on the market.

The ladies have found one definite disadvantage to wearing these neat-looking shirts—they have to be ironed. Ironing a shirt for some special man, for most women, consists merely of a few brisk strokes of the iron and slamming the shirt on a coat-hanger (after all, he'll wear a coat over it).

But her own precious wardrobe takes a bit more thought. It is safe to assume that after the woman has spent one month ironing cuffs and collars, her laundry is going to receive more business.

Shirts have been added to the collection of slacks, tailored suits and white bucks stolen from the men's dress. What will be next?

Hort Show Attendance

An estimated 15,000 to 20,000 people attended the 40th annual Hort Show on Homecoming Weekend. The figures of 1500 to 2000 as given in yesterday's Collegian were incorrect.

Co-Edits

Beta Sigma Omicron

Dorothy Pennick and Barbara Tooma were recently initiated by Beta Sigma Omicron.

Ellen Van der Voort, Sandra Weiss, Patricia Anspach and Leah Obert were pledged.

The sorority recently entertained Tau Kappa Epsilon at a square dance at the fraternity house. Dr. William M. Smith, professor of family relations, was caller. Refreshments were served after the dance.

Sigma Pi recently entertained Delta Gamma. A combo played for dancing and entertainment.

Doughnut Hole Question Is Answered

WASHINGTON (AP) — Possibly it never occurred to you that there could be any controversy on the subject of who invented the hole in the doughnut, and when and where did he do it?

"There is, though," said the man across the table. "There are at least three versions. But the fellow I represent has the only true one, and, thanks to Aunt Bessie, he can prove it."

The man across the table was Richard H. Cowles, a Burlington, Vt., attorney who was in town to bring the good word to a meeting of the Maine Society. The good word for these former residents of Maine was that the hole in the doughnut not only was invented by a Maine man but he actually was in Maine when he did it.

Descendant of Gregory

Cowles was here as a representative of Fred "Davey" Crockett, who is a Vermont boy scout executive when he isn't doughnutting. Crockett was supposed to come here to address the Maine Society, but his wife was ill, so he sent his attorney.

According to Cowles, Crockett is a descendant of Capt. Hanson Crockett Gregory. "On both his mother's and his father's side," Cowles said. "I won't bother to go into details, but he says he can prove it."

Anyway, Cowles said, it was Hanson Crockett Gregory who in 1847, at the precocious age of 15, invented the doughnut.

Rival Theories?
"The story is," Cowles said, "that he was watching his mother cook fry cakes, and she was having trouble getting them done in the middle. So the boy poked a hole in one, and there was the doughnut."

And the rival theories?
"Nothing to them," said Cowles cheerfully. "One is by a Massachusetts man who claims it was invented by an Indian. The In-

Penn State Shows Influence of Kinsey

By JOE BEAU SEIGNEUR

Since Al Kinsey invaded the publishing world formerly dominated by such greats as Kathleen Winsor, Polly Adler and Mickey Spillane, the Penn State coed has been in a dilly of a dizzy.

His report has had such far-reaching effects as jet black curtains in the now defunct Pollock 10 (sometimes referred to as Stalag 17) and Dean Pearl O. Weston's request for longer shorts and higher stockings.

Marriages

Minnich-Thomas

Mr. and Mrs. Simon B. Minnich of Landisville announce the marriage of their daughter Susan to Peter Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. William R. Thomas of Greensburg in the Zion Lutheran Church of Landisville.

Anne Wylie, Nancy Phillips, Edna Patterson, and Mary Wilson were bridesmaids.

Mrs. Thomas is a seventh semester home economics major.

Mr. Thomas was graduated from the College in 1952 and is now associated with the Atomic Energy Laboratories of the American Cyanamid Co. in Winchester, Mass.

PSCA to Discuss Student Behavior

"Who is Responsible for Student Behavior?" will be discussed at the Penn State Christian Association joint meeting with the board of directors at 7 tonight in 304 Old Main.

Emory J. Brown, assistant professor of rural sociology, will serve as moderator of the 6-member panel. The board of directors will be represented by Ross B. Lehman, assistant executive secretary of the Alumni Association; Dr. Dorothy Houghton, professor of home economics; and Dr. Charles Long, professor of education.

Students serving on the panel are Loa Joan Packard, Mary Pettigout and Michael Hanek.

A social hour will follow the meeting.

When asked this vital question during customs, "What do you think of the Kinsey report?," Ruth Gabel, first semester psychology major, exclaimed: "Go away! Ask somebody else! I'm not allowed to talk to upperclassmen. Hello." We assumed that this was the freshman girls' opinion for the duration of customs. At least Ruth gave me more of an answer than the college phone operator, who replied, "Dormitory."

Jones Is Fortunate

All this seems to have by-passed Marilyn Monroe, though, as one might assume from her recent appearance on the Jack Benny television show. Regardless of Kinsey's poll, Miss "3-D" herself is still making statistics of her own.

James Jones should feel fortunate that he managed to dash off his short novel, "From Here to Eternity," before the Kinsey report reared its not-too-ugly head, or he probably would be found mumbling to himself, or picking poses.

Will the Kinsey report end song writing, which before the report's publication consisted mainly of rhyming moon with June (apologies to Rodgers and Hammerstein)?

Save Your Money

Who cares? The latest tune to hit the campus is "Saint George and the Dragonet," which has little to do with love, unless you find something appealing about a dragon with one blood-shot eye.

And don't bother to buy the book when you can save your money and read all about women (coeds included) in the Collegian. The manuscript in question hasn't reduced the Old Mania list in Froth, so one can safely guess that sex is here to stay.

Outing Club to Elect Officers Tomorrow

The Outing Club, sponsored by Women's Recreation Association, will elect officers at 6:30 p.m. tomorrow in the White Hall playroom.

A program of semester activities will be planned.
