Modern Historians Face Crisis—Thaden

By LEN GOODMAN

If the modern historian performs the duties of a true historian, he faces an ethical dilemma today, declared Edward C. Thaden, instructor in history, Thursday at the second session of the current Political Science Club lecture-discussions.

Today, the historian is more or less a "scientifically trained specialist" in a very narrow field of endeavor, he said, and is "deathly afraid of moralizing" to any degree.

But, the historian is shirking his duty, he continued, when he fails to perform his role as "conserver of the cultural values based on sound reasoning."

Thus, the historian should be conservative, but in the best sense of the word. "He should make a point of indicating incidents of 'wanton insolence' and variations from the moral code, and should point to the distasters" that befell rulers of the past, Thaden explained, when this happened in the past.

Direction to Future

Any significant historical study of the past aims to influence the present and to give direction to the future, Thaden maintained. Since this has not been followed, he said, there have been only a very few important histories written since 1850.

The influence of Christian ethics on the development of western history is very evident, he added. In fact, western history as a whole has been rather peaceful under the restraining hand of Judeo-Christian ethics, as compared to the Greco-Roman-Medieval period, Thaden claimed.

St. Augustine approached the riddle of history, Thaden continued, by asserting that divine providence was the determining factor, and that a state or empire continued great only when it was relatively virtuous.

Ethic Part of Power

Of course, Thaden explained, Oswald Spengler, the profound German historian, considered a code of ethics as an element of power, and completely negated conventional ethics as a brake on power.

Meinecke, a modern historian, recognizes the need for the historian to make value judgments, Thaden continued, and supports the claim that the study of history is a search for the reason for the existence of the state, or why the state should exist at all.

Circle K to Meet

Circle K will hold an organizational meeting, 6:30 p.m. tomorrow at Delta Chi. John Lyon, acting chairman, said the club is open to former Key Clubbers and all interested persons.

Ex-German PW Will Address PSCA Group

Hans de Boer, former German prisoner of war, will speak on "Their Future Is Our Future" at the International Graduate Club meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday in 304 Old Main.

Sponsored by the Penn State Christian Association, the club has proved one of the most popular activities of the Christian Association.

After a brief formal meeting, students and international students are given the opportunity of exchanging ideas and discussing current affairs within their own countries.

The club is open to all graduate and international students regardless of their religion. Moslem and Hindu students have frequently spoken on their beliefs in regard to world affairs, religion and even their custom of polygamy.

Arre Appointed Head Of WSGA Committee

The House of Representatives of the Woman's Student Government Association announced Thursday the appointment of Aurelia Arre, fifth semester language major, as chairman of WSGA Nominating Committee. The appointment was made by Senate.

Presidents of women's dormitory units will place suggestion boxes in all dormitory hostesses' offices. These boxes will allow codes to make complaints or suggestions to WSGA.

Four Home Ec Faculty Attend Food Workshop

Dr. Kathleen A. Johnston, Dr. Mary L. Dodds, Harriet Fonda, and Helen A. Guthrie, faculty members from the School of Home Economics, attended the second food news workshop in Harrisburg this week.

Dr. Johnston took part in a consumer panel representing the college home economist in Pennsylvania. Members of this panel will tell producers of Pennsylvania products what they want to know about local products, their quality packaging, and general desirability.

Abramson to Discuss Sociology at Meeting

Edward Abramson, assistant professor of sociology, will discuss "The Scope of Sociology" at the first meeting of the Sociology Club at 7 p.m. Tuesday, in Simmons lounge. Refreshments will be served.

Pi Phi's to Be Initiated Today

Twenty women who were initiated last year into the Aye See Colony of Pi Beta Phi will be initiated into Pennsylvania Epsilon chapter of the national sorority today.

Twenty-one women initiated into the colony this fall were pledged to Pi Beta Phi yesterday as installation of the 100th chapter began.

Delegates of college and alumnae chapters in the district and of the National office of Pi Beta Phi are conducting the installation.

A formal installation banquet will be held at 6:30 tonight at the Nittany Lion Inn. The theme of the banquet will be "The Century Plant of Pi Beta Phi."

Tea Tomorrow—Representatives of town and campus groups and of the University administration have been invited to attend a tea from 3 to 5 p.m. tomorrow in McElwain Lounge.

Invited to serve in the receiving line are President and Mrs. Milton S. Eisenhower; Dean of Women Pearl O. Weston; Mrs. C. R. Carpenter, president of the State College alumnae club; Mrs. Robert S. Wild, grand president of Pi Beta Phi; Mrs. Floyd H. Carson, grand secretary; Mrs. Allen R. Rankin, province president; Mrs. Claude C. Shortz, province vice president; Melinda Thomas, president of the new chapter; and delegates from Bucknell University and Dickinson College.

Transfers Organize—The Aye See Colony was started last fall by four transfer Pi Beta Phi students. Two of the original colonizing group are still students at the University. They are Miss Thomas and Dorothy Robb.

Helene Steinbuchel, a graduate student sent by the national office of Pi Beta Phi to colonize, served as president of the group last year. Margaret Scott is the graduate student adviser this year.

The State College alumnae club was formed to supervise the progress of the colony toward installation in the national sorority.

Colonization was proposed at the national convention of Pi Beta Phi held in Fort Worth, Texas, the summer of 1952.
