

Penn State Legend --

There was no athletic program, but a few energetic students worked off steam on parallel bars in the woods behind Old Main. Student expenses were about $100 per year for everything but light, books and lab fees.

The local post office name was changed from Farm School to State College in 1874. A tri-weekly stage line between Bellefonte and State College, and Spruce Creek and State College gave students access to the two nearest railroad stations. Unfortunately, this convenience was later abandoned.

First Women Admitted

The enrollment grew steadily from 1865 to 1900. In 1871 the first two women were admitted as summer students and Penn State's bachelor days were over. By 1879 there were 49 women enrolled.

In 1874 the name was changed to The Pennsylvania State College, because, in the words of President James Calder, "the old name . . . expressed its purpose . . . and misled many persons as to its real character." This feeling is echoed today by the proponents of the present name change.

The Atherton Era

Under the leadership of George Washington Atherton many new buildings and courses were added. The curricula were reorganized into two general courses of study, the scientific and the classical. The first student publication, the Free Lance, appeared in 1887. The enrollment was then 244. A new building program was begun in the Atherton era, and under it Carnegie Hall, Schwab Auditorium, MacAllister Hall and the old Mining Building were built. The borough of State College, incorporated in 1896, grew along with Penn State, its population roughly equal to the school's enrollment.

Fraternity Movement Began

In 1907 the Departments of Home Economics and Forestry were added, and the enrollment continued to grow. A real fraternity movement began after an attempt by Delta Tau Delta to establish a permanent chapter in 1872 had failed. The first regular national fraternity to establish a chapter was Phi Gamma Delta, in 1888. By 1905 there were nine fraternities.

In 1897 Thespians was organized by a group of students and faculty members. Four years later the "Alma Mater" was written by Fred Lewis Pattee.

Intercollegiate Sports

It was during this period that interest and participation in intercollegiate athletics began. Penn State was fairly successful in all its athletic endeavors, but in 1889 the football team met a slight set-back when it was defeated by Lehigh, 106-0.

Between 1908 and 1920 the College grew literally by leaps and bounds. The number and variety of student activities increased, and more and more women students enrolled. Green dinks made their debut, and coeds could stay out till 3 a.m. on big weekends.

Gridgers Hit Spotlight

New buildings were built to house classes for the ever-growing student body, and then in 1919 Penn State entered its Golden Age of football, complete with several all-American players and a Rose Bowl game in 1922.

Progress is still being made in all directions, as is evidenced, in part at least, by the completion of the Whitmore Laboratories, the organization of the School of Business, the constant addition of new curricula, student activities and in-

TV to Be Installed In WD Next Week

Installation and operation of the television set for the West Dorm area will be completed by the latter part of the week, Carl Hiester, West Dorm Council television and radio committee chairman, reported Thursday.

The set will be placed in the Recreation room in Hamilton Hall. It was moved from the main lounge because of complaints about destruction to furniture. Reception tests were made in other locations in the area, but proved unsuccessful.

Faculty Luncheon Club

Richard C. Maloney, assistant dean of Liberal Arts, will speak on "A Look at Administration" at the Faculty Luncheon Club noon Monday. The meeting will be held at Hotel State College.

crease in student enrollment.

As the Pennsylvania State University, Penn State soon will begin a new century as truly a leading educational institution.

Lion Replicas Go On Sale Today

A shipment of authentic Nittany Lion replicas have been received by the Alumni Association, sole agent.

Students, faculty and staff members may buy these replicas, which are manufactured under the supervision of Heinz Warneke, sculptor of the Nittany Lion, in 104 Old Main. The price is $7.50 plus eight cents sales tax.

An additional charge of 50 cents will be made for mailing the statue.

Problems --

In the borough, too, there will probably be some confusion. A poll taken by the Centre Daily Times three weeks ago indicated that townspeople are not in favor of changing the name of State College.

Students and townspeople may have trouble remembering the change. But, they can always give it the old College—or new University—try.

No new element has been found in meteorites.
