Courses Are Given By Weather Station

By BETTY KOSTER

How many times have you had to explain to a bewildered freshman or transfer student that Penn State really DOES have rainy seasons as they have undoubtedly heard—or is this year different?

Even the meteorologists working at the University Weather Station, though confused, are enjoying the fall weather this year.

The University Weather Station set-up, typical of regular forecasting stations throughout the nation, is the most advanced, college weather bureau in the state. "Maybe this is true because we're the only one in Pennsylvania," Dr. Charles L. Hosler, meteorologist at the station, modestly added.

Private Weather Service

Contrary to common belief, the University Weather Station has no connection administratively with the federal government. It is, therefore, not a public weather service operated for the purpose of informing students when they may hold wiener roasts, big dances, or swimming parties. It does supply this information upon request but not as students often believe—weeks or months in advance!

The purpose of the station is primarily for student instruction. Besides regular courses for undergraduates, the division of meteorology offers a special three-semester post-graduate course to men sent by the Air Force from all over the United States.

The 45 students now enrolled in this course will receive B.S. degrees in meteorology and will then serve in the Air Force as weather forecasters.

Only One Phase

Students are often unaware of the important research being conducted at the University because they see only one phase of a professor's life, his teaching. For example, Dr. Hosler explains that the Meteorology department at Penn State is known all over the world for its research in meteorological optics, concerning the causes of halos, mirages, blue sky, and other common phenomena.

Laboratory work in cloud physics, more commonly termed rain making, is another example of the intensive research program being undertaken by University meteorologists. However, students can hardly blame the campus weathermen for spraying the State College clouds with dry ice in the spring, for all experiments are safely conducted in the Mineral Industries Building—with the windows closed.

Reitz-Sechrist

Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Sechrist of Bel Air, Md., announce the engagement of their daughter Kathleen to Victor Reitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Victor F. Reitz of Delta.

Miss Sechrist is a fifth semester physical education major at the University of Maryland.

Mr. Reitz is a ninth semester agriculture education major and a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

Carson-Reay

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Reay Jr. of DuBois announce the engagement of their daughter Sally to Richard Carson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Merl Carson, also of DuBois.

Miss Reay is a fifth semester music major at Indiana State Teachers College.

Mr. Carson, a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, is a fifth semester business administration major.

WRA Badminton Club Meeting Time Changed

The Women's Recreation Association Badminton Club will meet at 8:45 tonight in the White Hall gym.

The meeting time has been changed to accommodate basketball intramural games scheduled for 7 and 8 p.m.

were recently explained in the Daily Collegian are put up daily on the roof of the MI Building by senior meteorology students. The purpose of the flags is to indicate the prominent characteristic of the weather for the following 12-hour period, and they are changed during the day if the weather forecast changes.

A survey made by the Centre Daily Times early in the year showed that the weathermen were getting a raw deal in being blamed for making inaccurate predictions, for they were actually right 90 per cent of the time. No wonder—they predicted rain every day!

Dirt Path on Ag Hill To Be Paved Today

The dirt path between Curtin road and the salesroom of the Dairy Building will be paved this week, Walter W. Trainer, supervisor of lands, construction, and maintenance, said yesterday.

Work will start today, Trainer said, and should be completed tomorrow.

Art Faculty Paintings Will Be Exhibited

The first exhibition of paintings by members of the art faculties will open Monday in the Mineral Industries art gallery. The exhibit will continue until Dec. 12.

The paintings represent the works of more than 20 staff members of the Departments of Architecture and Art Education, and the University centers.
