

Birds Given Bird

Prof's Bird Chaser Rids Area of Pests

Did you every try to tell a starling that he's not wanted and that he should politely leave?

The birds in Millheim and State College headed for the fields when they were given the treatment in August by three Penn State scientists.

The treatment consists of the amplification of a very special noise, a noise that warns the starlings "it's time to get out."

Starling Chaser Works
The scientists, Dr. Hubert W. Frings, professor of entomology, his wife, Mable, and a graduate student in zoology, Joseph Jumber, have developed a starling chaser that does the work.

Still in the experimental stage, the "chaser" cleared the nearby community of Millheim of its 15,000 starlings, and certain areas of State College also were cleared before the birds departed on their annual flight to warmer climates.

Using a lightmeter, the scientists can predict the time of arrival of the birds in their favorite roosts and thus can be ready to apply the treatment before the birds are settled for the night.

Study Began Last Year
The study on the starlings was started a year ago at the request of the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. Starlings roosting in hangars cause serious damage to aircraft.

Although the scientists are limited in the size of the area they can treat with their experimental equipment, they hope to have continuing success in inducing the starlings to spend the nights, as well as the days, in the country.

29 to Attend SU Conference In McKee Hall

The fifth annual region 3 conference of the Association of College Unions, a Student Union organization, will begin at 11 a.m. tomorrow in McKee Hall.

Twenty-nine students and staff members from the University of Maryland, New Jersey College for Women, University of Pittsburgh, Allegheny College, University of Pennsylvania, University of West Virginia, Maryland State Teachers' College at Towson, and Drexel Institute of Technology will be at the conference.

Informal workshops will be held tomorrow afternoon and Saturday to discuss college union programs, student government, and the place of student unions on college campuses.

The delegates will be guests of Beta Theta Pi, Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Chi, Sigma Nu, Phi Gamma Delta, and Alpha Zeta for dinner following the discussions. The Agriculture Student Council has invited them to attend the Harvest Ball in Recreation Hall.

New Debaters To Take Part In Tournament

Eight neophyte debaters will participate Saturday in the annual Novice Debate Tournament at Temple University.

Four members of the Penn State Men's Debate team and four members of the women's team will journey to the tourney Friday. The national collegiate topic, "Resolved: That the United States should adopt a policy of free trade" will be debated.

Ellen Ross and Elizabeth Ives will present the affirmative arguments for the women, and Claire Kreiger and Suzanne Berelue will defend the negative side.

For the men, Herman Golomb and George Haines will uphold the affirmative and Edward Klevans and Jonathan Plaut will debate the negative.

Harold J. O'Brien, assistant professor of speech and assistant debate team coach, will accompany the men to the tournament.

About 20 colleges and universities from the entire eastern seaboard will participate in the event. The debate will be orthodox style. Four rounds of debate will be held.

The annual Temple novice tournament is open only to debaters who have had no previous experience in intercollegiate debating.

to say they go to Penn State. I don't think it will affect their class attendance."

Marlene Wells, first semester elementary education major: "Persons who cut classes now will probably continue to cut them, and conscientious students will keep their present attendance records."

Jack Apgar, fifth semester labor economics major: "Most of the students at the University are mature enough not to be influenced by such an addition to their environment. They may enjoy the facilities of the new building during coffee hours, but they'll remember to go to class too. That's why they're here."

Peggy Graves, first semester home economics major: "Students already have enough places to spend time, and the Student Union would make little difference when class time came."

Robert Hanna, seventh semester science major: "Class cutting may increase at the beginning of the semester, but after the novelty wears off things will get back to normal."

Lillian Yacopchak, seventh semester sociology major: "Students don't usually cut classes because they enjoy their surroundings. It's either pre-meditated or brought about by conditions other than the pleasant atmosphere of a well-decorated room."
