him sick"—Schonely's overexaggerated posture and gestures tend to detract from his characterization. A freshman, Schonely seems destined for a leading place in Players' shows. Yeatman, as the "Captain's" drinking companion, is the most humorous character in the play. Joxer's allusions to a "daarlin' girl," a "daarlin' song," or a "daarlin, daarlin funeral" induce laughter despite the ever-present undercurrent tragedy.

Albert Kalson, as Johnny Boyle, arouses pity with his neurotic terror of revolutionary order. He adheres to character even in the gay party scene, combining a convincing limp and successful illusion of a missing arm to become a completely pathetic person. Like Kalson, Mary Boyle, played honestly by Mary Loubris, overcomes a weak beginning as the play progresses.

In her first Players' show, Deborah Peek does an admirable job as the bird-like Mrs. Maddigan who joins with the family as a gay element in their good fortune and an understanding friend in their downfall. John Krug, as the supposed spirit of revolutionary youth, Jerry Devine, is weak and out of character with the other performers. Diane Hamel understandingly plays the pathetic Mrs. Tangred. Except for an Irregular, Thomas Bellin, who utters the powerful "No one can do enough for Ireland," the bit players often lapse into unintelligible brogue. Generally, though, the brogue is authentic and removed from the Pat-Mike stereotype.

Appearing in minor roles are James Carroll as Charlie Bentham; "Needle" Nugent, Robert Kaiser; and Richard Weber and John Henderson, furniture removal men.

A dramatic climax is most effectively reached at the end of the second act, where tragedy and comedy are enacted simultaneously—a gay family party progressing against the background of a Civil War wake. This scene and the ironic, anti-climatic drunken scene at the end, succeed to make up for the spottiness of powerful scenes among lagging ones—usually.

Technically, the music, lighting, and properties leave little to both inscribed "Queen of the Military Ball—Penn State—1953." The other finalists received loving cups inscribed "Military Ball Queen Finalist—Penn State—1953."

Decorations for the dance had a military theme. A number of flags, each representing a significant period in American history, encircled the dance floor. The walls and ceiling of Rec Hall were blue, dotted with red and white stars. The back of the bandstand was striped in red and white and had a blue base. At the west end of the hall stood a number of military "guide-ons," flags representing different military units.

Finalists for the queen contest were selected from 25 entries by cadet Capt. W. F. Dunkelburger, regimental commander at Virginia Military Institute, Lexington, Va.

be desired. The sparse setting accentuates the play's severity, with one lone chair epitomizing the "terrible state o' chassiss" of the end.

COME TO CHURCH

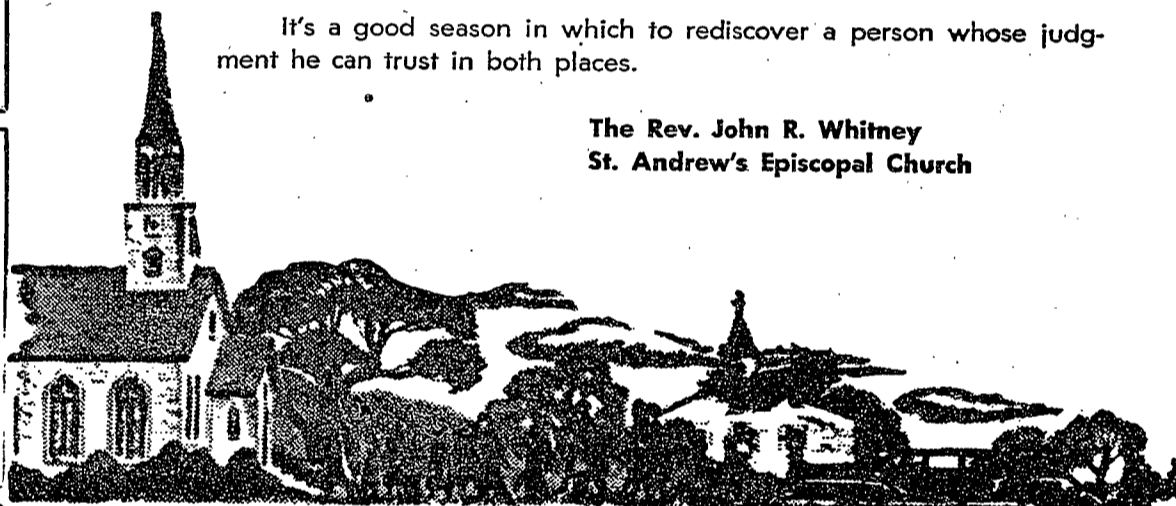

Christmas time is a good time for the student to reconsider his relationships with the important persons in his life—both those at home and those at school.

It's a good time for him to see if he himself is able to be the same person both in his parental and in his campus home.

It's a good season in which to rediscover a person whose judgment he can trust in both places.
