

FFA Band Plays At Farm Festival

The 100-piece Future Farmers of America Band, directed by James Dunlop, director of the Blue Band, entertained some 10,000 people last night at the Pennsylvania Farm Show's rural talent festival in Harrisburg.

Nearly 100 musicians and performers, including many from Centre County, were on hand for their part in the pageant, "Song of the Soil." Nine agricultural queens were also present for the production.

The festival, written and directed by William R. Gordon, professor of rural sociology, carried out the theme for the 38th annual show, "The Pennsylvania Rural Home."

Reports from judges indicated that a number of ribbons have gone to Centre County exhibitors in Monday's judging. Members of the Centre County 4-H Club copped 11 of the big prizes in the fat sheep division, including four championships. Twenty-three grand champions were named in Monday's events.

The farm show was officially opened Monday night in Harrisburg's Farm Show Building by Gov. John S. Fine, who praised the event as "an institution distinctively Pennsylvanian."

"This is the greatest farm show held and promoted by the greatest state in the greatest nation of the world," Fine told a standing-room crowd.

Youngsters livened up the interior of the huge building, despite the snow storm that cut attendance for the first day to 80,000—the lowest opening day showing since post World War II.

A wide variety of machinery heads the numerous farm exhibits, the trend being toward tractor accessories. The most colorful accessory is the beach umbrella, fastened by a chromium rod to the tractor seat. The purpose is to keep the sun off the farmer.

In other activities, judging of competitive entries began and will continue throughout the week. About $55,912 in prizes is being awarded by the Farm Show Commission.

Emeralds were once believed to be beneficial to the eyes and ametrists were thought to prevent drunkenness.

Five O'Clock Theater Seeks New Projects

Projects for Five O'Clock Theater, the one-act program of the Dramatics department's experimental theater, will be accepted for consideration for development and booking, the Experimental Theater Board has announced.

Projects may be submitted by students or staff members to George Oliver, Five O'Clock Theater supervisor. Roughly written suggestions may also be turned in to Oliver for assistance in developing them into a full "project proposal" for the board's consideration.

Preference will be shown to student and team projects and projects from outside the department, according to the board.

The Experimental Theater Board, composed of Oliver and Kelly Yeaton and Warren Smith, associate professors of dramatics, has stressed an interest in script-in-hand productions of locally written scripts. No projects over 30 minutes long will be accepted.

Cox Reports Library Loss

A large number of bound magazines have been taken from the new open stack room since it opened this semester, according to Mrs. Martha B. Cox, assistant periodical director.

This has been the first attempt of the University library to open its stacks to students.

Most students appreciate the new system which enables them to get magazines from the shelves and return them without signing for them, Mrs. Cox said, but the loss of important magazines may force the library to close the stacks again.

She emphasized the difficulty of keeping research facilities going with the loss of magazines from library shelves.

Nittany-Pollock Dorm Release Date Is Final

The date for applying for release from housing contracts in the Nittany-Pollock dormitory areas was Jan. 4 and has not been extended, James W. Dean, assistant to the dean of men, has announced.

Moreover, he said, freshman men are required to live in campus dormitories.

He said both freshmen and upperclassmen have applied for release since the Jan. 4 date.

There are only three ways a housing contract can be broken, he said. These are if a married student brings his wife to the community, if the student lives with his parent or guardian in the community, or if the student is experiencing extreme financial strain.
