Coed Chooses African Safari Over Classes

A fourth semester coed laid aside her textbooks last week to pack for a safari into Africa.

Lesley Tarleton, fourth semester meteorology major from Drexel Hill, will leave the United States Feb. 21 for a four-week excursion into Nairobi in British East Africa. She will travel first to Paris by airplane with her mother and a group of 15 other persons and then to Nairobi, the capitol of the royal colony of Kenya.

The 15-day safari, planned by the Ken and Downy Co., will take the group into the bush of Africa and end in the Belgium Congo.

Although the safari is chiefly to hunt wild game, Miss Tarleton said there would be no hunting for her and her mother. "In the first place," she said, "we couldn't hit anything even if we did shoot at it. And if we shot anything, what would we do with it?"

The safari will be the first of such trips for Miss Tarleton. When asked if she knew very much about Africa, she said, "Only what's in my geography book."
