Collegiate Chatter

take accurate, comprehensive notes has an advantage over the student whose notes are a shaky vehicle for study. With this in mind we are passing on the following tips on how to take notes which originally appeared in the Madison College Breeze:

The professor says: "Probably the greatest quality of the poetry of John Milton, who was born in 1608, is the combination of beauty and power. Few have excelled him in the use of the English language, or for that matter, in the lucidity of verse form, "Paradise Lost" being said to be the greatest single poem ever written."

You write down: "Milton—born 1608."

"When Lafayette first came to this country, he discovered America, and Americans needed his help if their cause were to survive, and this he promptly supplied them."

"Lafayette discovered America."

"... it is possible that we do not completely understand the Russian viewpoint..."

"Professor Mitchell is a Communist."

"Pages 7 through 15 are not required, but will prove of inestimable value to the student in preparation for the term examination."

"Omit pages 7 through 15."

"Socrates was a stoic, but it should be pointed out that stoicism is very different from cynicism. A cynic is contemptuous of all things, especially human nature, whereas a stoic is one who accepts all things as they are without complaining."

"Socrates was a cynic."

"The examination will test the student's overall comprehension of the subject and thorough knowledge of theories behind the facts and their relevance to fields other than political science will be absolutely necessary."

"Bull exam."

"The class Friday will probably be the most important of the year since we will throw it open to a general discussion of the main problems which have come to our attention throughout the course. Attendance will not be taken."

"No class Friday."

While being so proud of our eighth-semester eleven o'clock permissions we were amazed to learn that one of the most unusual privileges was recently granted to the senior class at Radcliffe College. According to a report in the Harvard Crimson, seniors will be given an unlimited number of—brace yourself—5 a.m. permissions.

Spelunkers Invade Pennsylvania Caves

By MIKE MILLER

A spelunk is a fancy name for a cave. A spelunker on the other hand, is a person who wades through oceans of mud, swings through the air like a trapeze artist, and swims icy underground pools, just for fun.

This fascinating avocation was illustrated Wednesday in a slide talk by Arthur Hussey, president of the Nittany Grotto, at a meeting of the Penn State Outing Club.

Hussey, an eighth semester geology major, explained that the club conducts field trips through many caves in central Pennsylvania and explores the beautiful underground caverns.

Many caves are found at sinkholes in limestone valleys, Hussey said, but openings are often buried under dirt and trash and are very hard to find.

Once found the caves are often difficult to enter, said Hussey. Many of them go straight down and must be entered on a rope-ladder. The openings, too, are often so narrow a man can barely squeeze through.

"One passage was so tight," Hussey stated, "that one of the fellows had to take a small compass out of his pocket to get through." When the passages widen, however, the spelunker may find himself swinging through the air like a trapeze artist.

On the floor of a cave the spelunker often encounters adverse conditions, Hussey pointed out. The mud is sometimes knee-deep, the passages may be only a foot or so wide, and sometimes the explorers are even forced to swim icy pools. The spelunker, however, enjoys many breath-taking and unusual sights for his efforts, Hussey's slides showed.

This area of the state offers many different types of caves for the enjoyment of spelunkers and many kinds of formations may be found, Hussey said.

The club has been responsible for the discovery of many caves in this area, Hussey continued. The organization has also assisted R. W. Stone, past geologist for the state of Pennsylvania, in preparing a report on Pennsylvania caves to the National Speleological Society.

The club is a member of the N.S.S. and is affiliated with approximately 45 similar grottoes throughout the country. The club's newspaper, the Nittany Grotto Newsletter, informs these affiliated organizations of its accomplishments and doings.

New members, both men and women, are always welcome, Hussey said, and the club provides some of the equipment.
