

Inquiring Reporter: New Voting Plan Opinions

By MARCIE MacDONALD

Seven students out of 12 interviewed by the Inquiring Reporter this week approved the elections committee's decision to use a decentralized voting system in the All-College elections this spring.

The remaining five voiced varying opinions for disapproving the plan. Several of both the negative and positive answers expressed doubt as to whether the plan will cause more interest in campus politics.

Here are the replies given by students in the survey:

Ruth Rasmussen, sixth semester art education major: "The plan is certainly worth a try but I wonder if the hoped-for results will be good enough to justify the added work."

Ruth Meng, sixth semester home economics major: "I don't think it is necessary to have more polls. Although the plan might increase the number of students who vote, it would decrease the value of the elections as a whole in that students would be voting from sheer convenience and not because they were really interested in campus politics."

Ruth Barnard, second semester arts and letters major: "I think decentralization is a must. Additional polls should be placed near the University dining halls, and one should be maintained in Schwab or Old Main for fraternity men and town students. I also think the voting period should be limited to one day."

Theodore Schmidt, sixth semester geology major: "Old Main is too far from some places on campus for everyone to vote there when they have a free minute but those that are really interested will get there anyway. With more polls, people would vote simply because it was convenient."

Ralph Ferry, eighth semester animal husbandry major: "It (the plan) is worth a try. I think more people would vote under such a plan. It certainly would be more convenient."

Raymond Anton, fourth semester dairy husbandry major: "I approve of the plan. More people would vote since the polls would be more conveniently located. Some students never get near Old Main—especially Ag majors!"

Audrey Fulton, fourth semester arts and letters major: "I think it's a good idea to have more polls. If people don't happen to be near Old Main they probably won't vote, but they would if there were polls near the dorms."

Alice Gardner, fourth semester arts and letters major: "Decentralization of voting won't necessarily get out more voters—for instance, in the WSGA elections, held in women's dorms, not a very high percentage of coeds vote. I don't know what the answer is to the problem of disinterest, but I am sure it is not decentralization."

Doris Reineohl, sixth semester botany major: "If people are interested in voting they will vote anyway; if they're not interested, more polls won't stir up interest."

John Maliniak, sixth semester business administration major: "I think it is a good idea. More students would be able to get to polls. People who really care about politics will go to Old Main, but more polls will create interest in politics."

Lewis Wade, sixth semester geophysics and geochemistry major: "Under the decentralization plan, part of the purpose of All-University elections, acquainting students with voting machines, would be defeated since all four polls could not be equipped with them. Otherwise, the convenience would increase the number of voters, I think."

Gene Laughlin, eighth semester chemical engineering major: "I'm in favor of trying it out, but I don't think it's really so hard to get to Old Main to vote. If people want to, they'll get there. True, more people might vote with decentralization of polls."

COME TO CHURCH

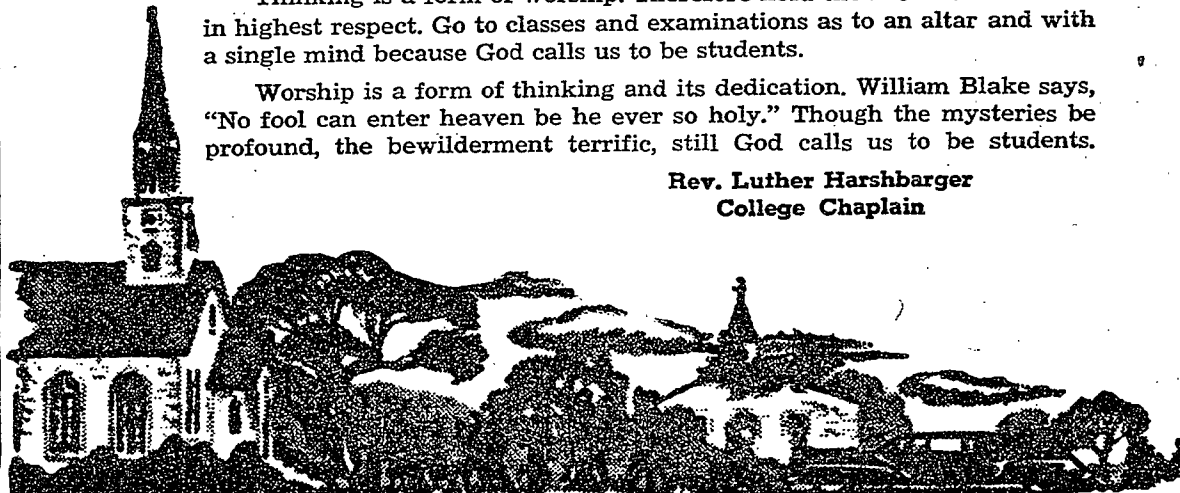

Thinking is a religious task. Ideas have consequences which determine the climate of culture, rule our hearts and minds, and dictate our behavior.

It is required of us as students to take seriously the life of the mind, bringing certain attitudes and disciplines (candor, intellectual and moral courage, accuracy, docility to the facts, love of bracing labor) to bear on all inquiry. Real work is done in the brain.

Thinking is a form of worship. Therefore hold the life of the intellect in highest respect. Go to classes and examinations as to an altar and with a single mind because God calls us to be students.

Worship is a form of thinking and its dedication. William Blake says, "No fool can enter heaven be he ever so holy." Though the mysteries be profound, the bewilderment terrific, still God calls us to be students.
