only one—Schwab Auditorium—was eliminated. Allan Schneirov, reporting on the possibility of a polling place located in Schwab, said Thursday classes scheduled in Schwab would make it impossible to set up a polling place.

With the exception of naming two more polling places, a spring election code was approved by the committee last night. The decision on places of voting will be completed next week, Kohn said, and will be ready for cabinet.

The approved spring code is basically the same as the fall code, with the exception of date and time changes, a clique regulation amendment, a decentralized voting amendment, and the fraternity-independent man eligibility rotation system.

Other changes in the code approved by the committee last night are a clause added to the method of campaigning article and two changes in the places of campaigning article.

Under the method of campaigning, the new clause takes into consideration a person proven guilty or a witness who can prove guilt of another. Any person attempting to take advantage of the decentralized voting system by voting for another person will be subject to Tribunal action.

The changes in the places of campaigning deal with the number and size of campaign posters. The committee decided to allow two permanent-type campaign posters per clique inside a store window in the borough last fall, one poster of this type was allowed.

On campus, there may be a maximum of 20 posters from each clique instead of 12 which was allowed last fall, the committee decided. The committee also upped the size of the campus posters to three by three feet. Posters, at maximum last fall, were two by two feet.

were sponsored by Beta Theta Pi. Carlene Samuels, fourth semester pre-medical major from Lewisburg, was sponsored by Zeta Tau Alpha. Marjorie Schenck, second semester journalism major from Metuchen, N.J., is sponsored by the Used Book Agency.

A special picture of Penn State's queen will be taken by the Department of Public Information and forwarded to contest headquarters in Pittsburgh.

The pictures of winning candidates from each of the 30 competing colleges and universities in the Tri-State area will appear April 11 in the ROTO section of the Pittsburgh Press. Press readers will vote for the final contest winner by sending in ballots printed in the Press. A full-color picture of the contest winner will appear on the cover of the ROTO section sometime in May.

Coeds in the contest may pick up their pictures this week at the Student Union desk in Old Main.

Spring Schedules Due For Student Employment

Students who registered for student employment last fall and would like employment again this spring should file their spring schedules at the Student Employment office, John Huber, director, has announced. Students who do not fill out schedules will be put on the inactive list.

Home Ec Council Rejects ISCB Election Plan

The Home Economics Student Council, last night voted against the Inter-School Council Board's proposal for the popular election of council officers.

Under the proposed plan, the student of each college would select the student council officers at the spring election when they voted for the council representatives. These officers would not have to have been previous members of the council. At the present time, the officers for the next year are elected by the old council from its membership.
