Spring Week: Climbing More Obstacles

The Spring Week committee took a few more wise steps last week to eliminate from the week and carnival loopholes campus groups are eternally seeking.

Ever since its birth, Spring Week has been in eternal combat with participating groups who have sought ways to win the week trophy easily. It is a wonder, then, that the Spring Week committee has a chance to accomplish anything else under this handicap.

The most recent move was a limitation on the number of groups that may join together in the week. In the past, fraternities have joined with sororities. The present limitation provides a preventative whereby this combination will not snowball. Obviously, combination of three or four such groups into one could provide enough power for the combined group to win the week trophy. Thus, most groups would be at a definite disadvantage.

The committee was also wise to limit the number of entries one group may make in the He-Man, Ugly Man, and Miss Penn State contests. In the past, points have been awarded for entries. As a result, the Miss Penn State contest alone was swamped. This year, quality rather than quantity should be forthcoming.

Some campus groups did not contribute to this year's Campus Chest drive, having an ulterior motive. These groups saved their money and plan to use it to support an Ugly Man entry. Having highest contribution in Campus Chest is materially nothing compared to the Spring Week points and trophy that winning the Ugly Man contest brings.

These groups have attempted to justify their action. Proceeds of the Ugly Man contest have traditionally gone to Campus Chest, they say. Proceeds of the Campus Chest drive go to Campus Chest. Therefore, they conclude, it makes no difference to which drive contributions are made.

In fact, there is no difference. Ethically, there is. It is too bad there are groups who must profit from everything they do—even when it is donating to such a drive. It is a shame we cannot do things without hope of gain. These groups may have found a loophole. That is, if the Spring Week committee does not soon plug the loophole first.

The only real obstacle to Spring Week success now seems to be the carnival site. The carnival is to be at Windercrest. In the past, it has been on paved areas. The Windercrest site is relatively unpaved. Thus, the traditional spring rain could kill the carnival.

This Spring Week looms as the best ever. If fraternities and sororities watch their conduct, and if the University is tolerant and not hyper-critical, this event can do much for Penn State. If either falls down in its obligation, we may find a good thing ruined.

Family Talks

The series of family conferences now under way through the sponsorship of the Women's Student Government Association and the Penn State Christian Association are offering practical information that eventually will be of use to most students, regardless of their course of study.

There has been an increasing demand for reliable knowledge on the subject of marriage and family living to replace the hit or miss theories with which many have, in the past, taken the "big step." An evidence of this is the greater number of sections of child and family courses being scheduled to accommodate the increased registration.

The current series of conferences offers a chance for students unable to schedule courses in the field to glean some of the practical information available, and for students who have studied the subject to augment their knowledge.

Safety Valve— On Men's Dress

TO THE EDITOR: It has been aptly stated that people who live in rock houses should not throw milk bottles. Well, after reading the March 4 issue, we are beginning to doubt that Pennsylvania State University women ever heard of the phrase.

The article to which I refer is titled "Coed Panel Group Aims Men's Dress." Speaking for myself and several others, the girls should air their own dress. Both their comment and dress, to put it mildly—stink!

If the women looked at their dress as critically as they do at the men's, then they would be perfectly correct in expressing their views. However, they are under the impression that they stand behind a one-way mirror—they can see us, but we cannot see them.

... And they criticize men's clothes. Ha!

Prexy Asks Aid For Latin America

President Milton S. Eisenhower yesterday called for a five-point program to promote healthier economic relations between the United States and Latin America and to counter Communist gains in the Western Hemisphere.

While he spoke, the United States pledged economic cooperation with Latin America at the 10th Inter-American Conference being held at Caracas, Venezuela.

Warning against the dangers of "a rising tide of ultra-nationalism" in Latin America, Dr. Eisenhower declared:

"Often the door is closed by blind nationalistic feeling to the very help and cooperation which are so desperately needed. Ultra-nationalism leads to laws and practices which prevent the entrance of foreign capital essential to development."

In a luncheon address before Pittsburgh's Duquesne Club, Dr. Eisenhower recommended:

1. The U.S. adopt and adhere to stable trade policies with Latin America with a minimum of mechanism permitting increased tariffs or quotas.
2. A long-range policy which will permit the United States to purchase imperishable materials when prices are low.
3. Continuance of public loans to South America for sound projects.
4. The United States expand its technical cooperation program in Latin America.
5. The U.S. continue to support the International Monetary Fund and agencies in this country be retained to stimulate long-range economic development programs.

Latin Americans are dissatisfied with U.S. policies because they have not had a share in the post-war economic recovery programs initiated in Europe, the Middle East, and Asia, Dr. Eisenhower said.

"Latin Americans have tended to forget that they enjoyed an unprecedented boom during World War II and the post-war period so that there was no need for emergency programs for that area," he said.

As a result, Dr. Eisenhower said, they have sometimes come to the view that the U.S. considers other areas of the world to be more important to its future than the countries of Latin America.

Dr. Eisenhower recalled observations made during his good-will mission to South America for his brother, President Dwight D. Eisenhower. "We found," he reported, "that the U.S. is still painted by Communists and their sympathizers as an 'imperialist' power that seeks to exploit the Latin economies."

Prexy Views Nation's Faith As Strength

The founders of this country accepted no political formulae without what they deemed was Divine Guidance, President Milton S. Eisenhower said Monday night.

Speaking at the 20th annual men's dinner of the Mt. Lebanon Methodist Church, Pittsburgh, on "The Spiritual Foundations of Democracy," President Eisenhower said modern communist and despotic leaders like Karl Marx and Adolf Hitler recognized where the main strength of the democratic idea lies—and so condemned Christianity.

"Unfortunately, while the enemies of our way of life have been quick to see through to the very heart of our democratic system and to identify its essence, we Americans—or many of us—have been tardy in recognizing, or at least in acknowledging, the spiritual basis of our inheritance," he said.

President Eisenhower then pointed out that never before in our history have religious discussions and services been available to so many millions of people. Religious affairs have been brought to the attention of many Americans, he said, through the press, and religious themes have had a very great appeal in motion pictures, periodicals, and books. Never before, he continued, has the Bible had a greater circulation.

"These all are not merely evidences of our seeking refuge from the age of anxiety, although such a search is involved," President Eisenhower added, "but that very search is yielding... a fresh and deeply reassuring realization of the true source of our national strength."
