

Changes Approved In AIM Constitution

By DON SHOEMAKER

Three of four proposed amendments to the Association of Independent Men's constitution were approved on second reading by the AIM Board of Governors Wednesday night. The fourth amendment, dealing with reorganization of the AIM Judicial Board was referred back to the reorganization committee for rewording.

The first amendment, which will establish compensation for AIM officers, was approved without change. The amendment provides $100 annual compensation for the AIM president, $50 for the secretary and treasurer, and $25 for the vice president. If the amendment is finally passed by the Board of Governors and approved by three-fourths of the dormitory area councils, compensation will go into effect next fall.

The second amendment approved for the second time, deals with reorganizing the Executive Board of AIM. If the amendment is passed, the board will consist of the executive officers of AIM, and the presidents of the living areas represented on the Board of Governors—West Dorms, Nittany, Pollock, and town.

This amendment would replace article C-1 of the present constitution, which provides that the executive board be composed of executive officers of AIM, editor of the Independent Newsletter and chairmen of the athletic, social, and project committees.

The third approved amendment provides for the establishment of five standing committees—National Independent Student's Association, publicity, social, projects, and elections.

The fourth proposed amendment, which would revamp the AIM Judicial Board, provides that all eight members of the board be appointed in the spring as members-at-large. The chairman of the board will also be appointed in the spring. All members of the board, including the chairman would be appointed by the AIM president. The amendment also provides that the chairman of the board be a fifth or sixth semester student at the time of his appointment.

Robert Harding, chairman of the reorganization committee, moved to refer this amendment back to his committee. He said he felt it would save time and discussion on the floor of the Board of Governors if the proposals were reworded before it was presented for a second reading.

He said rewording was needed to fit the amendment into the existing constitution. He did not elaborate, however, saying that he would need time to give the matter further study.

The first three amendments will be voted on by the Board of Governors on April 21. To be passed, the amendments must be approved by a majority. If the amendments are passed by the board, they will be submitted to the four councils for approval. If they are approved by the councils, they will be written into the constitution.

The fourth proposed amendment will also be presented for a second reading and discussion April 21. If the second reading is approved, the amendment will be voted on at the following meeting of the board.

spots of the All-University ballot, the presidency and vice presidency, while State Party captured the secretary-treasurership.

State Party Wins

State Party won the three senior class offices, and Lion Party made a sweep of the three junior class positions.

Bus Ad Council Sets Elections

two Restoration rakes and a 20th century night-club entertainer in Hades. Ken Williams and John Aniston, as the two Restoration characters, are superb, and Rochelle Zinger turns in an equally fine performance as she plays the amoral, sensually attractive entertainer.

"Three by Three," a subtle literary satire, concerns the handling of the eternal triangle theme by three playwrights: Anton Chekov, Eugene O'Neill, and Noel Coward. This is only one of the unusual types of skits appearing in the revue.

Gerald Denisof is continually bouncing in and out and appearing in all sorts of odd places in the room as he acts as a combination of a type of semi-master of ceremonies and performer. Denisof is excellent as he sings "Mowing the Barley," an old English ballad, while a dance illustrating the theme of the song is done in the background.

Surprisingly enough, dancing was one of the show's principal attributes. Usually, when we see a dance about to begin, we become apprehensive and wonder how sloppy it's going to be, but with "Pick Up Sticks" our fears were all in vain. The first number, "The Poison Goblet," was well-received by the audience, and the standard set by it was maintained by each succeeding dance. The culminating point of the dances was "Bahia," an Afro-Cuban number.

Probably the greatest amount of applause should be directed toward director Robert D. Reifsnider who did the choreography, but it would be impossible to forget individual fine work as that of Kenneth Thomas, who was at his height in "The Simple Pleasures," a dance depicting the amusements of a small boy.
