Dean Elected Faculty Advisor To NISA

James W. Dean, assistant to the dean of men in charge of independent affairs, last week was elected faculty advisor to the National Independent Students Association.

Dean was one of four advisers elected by delegates at the four-day NISA convention held April 12 to 16 at Cornell University.

About 22 schools having enrollments of more than 5000 were represented at the convention.

The four-day program, "Reciprocal Responsibility of Individual and Organization," included seven discussion groups of approximately 15 students each, led by Penn State representatives from Leonides and Association of Independent Men.

Leading discussions were Thomas Kidd, Has Simm, Robert Solomon, Joyce Shusman, Ethel Wilson, Betty Buchanan, and William Johnson.

Seven delegates from the University served as secretaries and recorders for the discussion groups. They were Joan Packard, Vonnie Leith, James Anderson, Duane Holme, Stanley Juras, Chester Cherwinski, and Joy Oran.

Julie Maybury, second semester business administration major, was named one of four attendants to the convention sweetheart, crowned at the close of the convention.

Students to Seek LA Council Seats

Students in the College of the Liberal Arts may file nominating petitions for student council seats April 28, 29, and 30 in the Liberal Arts office, 105 Sparks, Larry Gedrich, elections committee chairman, has announced.

Elections will be held May 5 and 6, Gedrich said.

Students must have a 1.5 All-University average to be elected and must nominate themselves.

The gagsters who insist that nothing is harder for a woman to acquire than the art of silence don't realize how much "the little women" have progressed through their very talkativeness. Our nation's capital, Washington, D.C., more than any other city, is dependent on the woman.

More than 40 per cent of government employees in the capital are women. And the percentage of women government employees throughout the nation is revealing on first sight.

Senate Seat 1

One of the first sights a Washington tourist will encounter is the Capitol. Observation of Congress in session is free to the public, and usually an unarmed person is readily admitted. Seated in the Senate chamber chair designated "1" is slender, gray-haired, Margaret Chase Smith, Maine Republican. The House contains many women representatives.

Note: If you happen to walk in on the Senate in session, and see but 15 of the 96 senators in the chamber, don't be shocked. Many senators will be in committee meetings, at hearings, or in their offices. They usually manage to come in for a vote, though.

From the Washington Monument, which is a "must" on a visit to D.C., one can observe a clear view of Washington's layout. It takes 898 steps to reach the top landing, but an elevator can carry one up in 55 seconds.

Unknown Soldier

Across the Potomac River and not far from Washington, D.C., proper, is the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. A constant guard is kept over the monument and the changing of the guard occurs at regular intervals—usually every hour on the hour.

Within walking distance from the monument is the anchor of the Maine and General Robert E. Lee's mansion.

Seeing all of D.C. takes an abundance of interest and a lasting endurance. For although the main thoroughfares of the capital are very wide, traffic is heavy. Busses and trolleys are always filled during the early morning and after-work hours.

Pollock to Speak At DG Conference

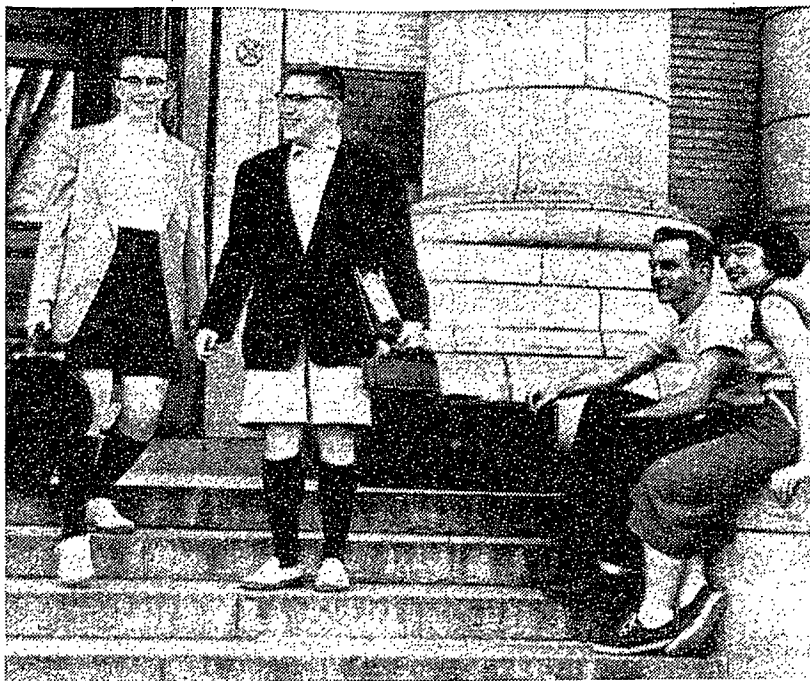

O. Edward Pollock, assistant to the dean of men in charge of fraternity affairs, will discuss "Through the Looking Glass," at the state meeting of Delta Gamma Saturday on campus.

Pollock will speak to the alumnae of the sorority at 2 p.m. at the Autoport restaurant. The talk will concern the relations of Greeks in the general community.

Froth Ad Staff to Meet

Froth advertising staff will meet at 7 tonight in the Froth office, basement of Carnegie Hall.

THE LENGTH of men's trousers this spring must be conversely proportional to the length of the knee socks worn with them, according to the latest fashion bulletin. William Mills and Thomas Williams model Bermuda shorts exposing the proper and circum-spect amount of knee surface. The well dressed man about campus of course wears white bucks and the classic blazer to complete the outfit.

Secretary Advises Foreign Students

By BILL SNYDER

Imagine you're a foreign student attending college here, thousands of miles from home, family, or relatives, and you're bewildered by the strange customs of a strange land.

At Penn State the first person you would probably turn to would be Mrs. Rebecca Doerner, secretary of Veterans and Foreign students.

Mrs. Doerner, liaison between the foreign students and various government agencies, for a number of years has been giving foreign students sympathetic advice and practical guidance.

She feels that by doing this she is making her own contribution toward improving international relations.

Her help and advice often begins before students reach campus and continues until they leave. Numerous times she has been aroused from bed by an urgent call from some student stranded in Grand Central Station or some other place, seeking directions to the University. They are calling the one person they know will be willing and able to help them.

Finds Rooms for Couples
She makes it her special concern to locate rooms for married students for whom the University does not provide living quarters. She has also helped place many single students in rooms.

Mrs. Doerner sometimes has trouble in adjusting foreign students to live in American homes because of their different ways of living. But she says they learn our ways quickly through experience and through having them explained.

The foreign students are not here long before many express difficulty in understanding spoken English, and Mrs. Doerner's advice and help is again needed. Language difficulty could easily lead to poor social adjustment.

Mrs. Doerner holds long conversations with the students, always in English, testing their comprehension. The ones she feels may have difficulty in adjusting because of English deficiency she recommends to Speech 115, American speech for foreign students.

Mrs. Doerner doesn't neglect the students' social side. She gets them more speaking engagements and party initiations than they can handle.

Gets Travel Information
When the students become more adjusted to American life and wish to travel to other places, Mrs. Doerner frequently gets the necessary traveling information for them, recommending places to stay and routes to take.

Anytime when a student is homesick, having trouble with his studies, or just plain blue, Mrs. Doerner is ready with a quiet, sympathetic talk to make him feel better.

She says she personally knows each of the University's 117 foreign students—ranging from a homesick Burmese boy to an Ital-

Given Coins as Souvenirs

Mrs. Doerner has coins from 33 countries, given her by foreign students. She says the students love to tell her of their homelands and are particularly proud of a large map in her office marked with flags for every country represented on campus. There are 42 flags.

"Our office tries to build good public relations in addition to giving information on government functions," Mrs. Doerner said in summing up her work. "We try to make the students happy here so they'll have a good impression of the U.S. to take home with them."
