Good Talent, Acting In Thesis Show

By JOE BEAU SEIGNEUR

Although Gordon Greer's thesis production of Sidney Howard's "They Knew What They Wanted" doesn't touch the delightful "Thirteen Clocks" of last year, Greer has to his credit some excellent talent, and good casting.

Free tickets for the production, which will be staged at 7:30 tonight and tomorrow in the Little Theater, are available at the Green Room, second floor Schwab Auditorium.

Al Sarkas is so good in the part of Tony, the aging Italian bootlegger, that he is frequently overlooked by anyone trying to be critical. He fits so well into the role that the audience gets the impression he was imported from Napa Valley, Calif., just for Greer's production.

Jack Joyce and Frances McCrory prove a point that there is plenty of undiscovered talent on campus. Joyce, as Joe, not only looks like a migrant foreman, but keeps the play going when Tony is off stage.

McCrory, who plays Amy, looks like she uses a powerful brand of eye sparkle, has a good speaking voice, and fits well into the confusion.

An ineffective set and indifferent recordings for a background music do little to aid the show. Lighting, costumes and make-up are tastefully done, however.

Ah Gee, a Chinese cook played by Ed Klose, looks like an unexotic leftover from last year's "Lute Song." Lee Stern, as Father McKee, is agreeable enough in his role, and is helped with a particularly good make-up job.

The best staged scene in the production takes place in the second act when Italian grape pickers, celebrating the wedding of Tony and Amy, pour into the living room. With Tony almost flat on his back, Amy in her bridal veil, and all sorts of Italian greetings being flung from anywhere on stage, the resulting confusion is sheer joy.

The Italians, played by Duke Miller, Morton Slakoff, Betty Rice, Pat Snyder, Jim Kennedy, Mary McCommons, and others are excellent extras. Charles Berryhill is good, too, as the Doc-

Each first prize winner received 50 additional points for their sponsors and a cash prize of $5. Forty additional points were given to the three second prize winners, and the three third prize winners received 30 additional points.

The total points won by each group in the Mad Hatter's parade will be allocated to the sponsors by the Mad-Hatter committee. Results will be announced tomorrow, Miss Scofield stated.

The four councils will take responsibility for distributing notices for these posts.

In miscellaneous business, the board of governors approved the following committee chairmen for next year: Thomas Kidd, constitution revision; Robert Solomon, NISA coordinator; Robert Harding, Autumn Ball; James McDowell, Dink Debut.

Recommendations were discussed by the board that a judicial stenographer be hired by the Judicial Board to take notes, and that AIM send a representative to the National Student Association convention in Iowa.

tor, who displays his knowledge of the bones in the legs. Rody Otto, as the R.F.D., has the audience wondering how he can talk with a plug of tobacco in his mouth.

Greer has much to his credit in designing the play for Little Theater. The play would have been immensely aided by a larger stage, however. It is still worth the walk up to the second floor of Schwab to pick up free tickets.

Conquest Elected Head

Robert Conquest, sixth semester psychology major, has been elected president of Kappa Phi Kappa, men's education honorary society.

Other officers are James Lindner, vice president; Rodney McLaughlin, corresponding secretary; Raphael Belford, recording secretary; and George Wilbur, treasurer.
