

Dennis Relates Program Plans

Who says you have to be on the "inside" to get anywhere in campus politics, asked Robert Dennis, president of the Association of Independent Men, in an interview concerning his plans for AIM policy next year.

Chapel Plan May Go To Trustees

Approval of the architectural sketch for the All-Faith chapel, action on a recommendation concerning faculty traffic violations, and consideration of plans for the building of four home-management houses are matters which may come before the executive committee of the Board of Trustees at its regular meeting here Friday evening.

No official agenda is released for the meetings.

The committee must approve the architectural sketch of the chapel before actual drafting of the plans can begin.

No Commitment

As yet, the administration has made no commitment on whether the chapel will be built in Georgian or contemporary style. Final decision on the matter must be made by the trustees.

Another possible topic for discussion is a recommendation from a committee of the Council of the Administration concerning faculty and staff traffic violation.

No Statement Available

No statement on what is included in the recommendations will be available until they have been acted upon by the Board of Trustees. The recommendations were made because students have complained they are fined for violations while faculty and staff members are given warnings by the dean of their college for the same violations.

Plans for four home-management houses must also be approved by the trustees. The trustees ordered the University architect to proceed with plans for the units at their last meeting.

The buildings will be constructed on the lot north of East College avenue, formerly occupied by trailers.

Three buildings will be constructed. Two will be one-story each and the third will be a two-story building with two units, each having two floors.

Work of Art Editor

The four main dividers for the 1954 book employ these colors in a pattern surrounding a monochromatic water color brush drawing in black black on a yellow-tint block. They were the work of Juliana Fees, art editor and eighth semester Education major, and Robert Breeding, sixth semester architecture major, who has been named art editor for the 1955 La Vie.

The new campus gate at Pollock and Atherton road, done in water color by Breeding, is the subject for the title page of the book. A sketch of the capitol building in Harrisburg, done in the same technique by Breeding, also is used in the book.

'Blossoms' To Decorate Senior Ball

Blossom Time, complete with artificial blossoms, trees, and overhanging boughs, is the theme of the Senior Ball, which will be held tomorrow from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. in Recreation Hall.

Decorating will be done by the G. A. Trahan Company of New York which has decorated for all of Penn State's major dances in the last 20 years. The theme chosen by the Senior Ball committee is one of a variety offered by the company. After the committee has selected a theme, the company takes complete charge of decorating.

Material Flameproofed

Workers start on Rec Hall at noon Thursday and sometimes do not finish until half an hour before the dance Friday night. The material used for decorations is flameproofed, in accordance with state laws.

Tickets, priced at $4, will go on sale tomorrow at the Student Union desk in Old Main, and an unlimited number will be sold. Tickets may also be obtained at the door. The price of tickets for major dances has not increased since 1931, despite the increase in cost of decorations and orchestras.

Dance Programs

Programs for the dance will have black and red shiny covers with red cords.

Richard Hayman and his orchestra will play. Hayman is becoming popular with his art on a harmonica. Most people have attempted playing one at one time or another, but few are as successful as he has been.

The dance tomorrow night is an annual tradition with seniors and will be the last major dance of the academic year.

Baker Will Head Management Club

David Baker, sixth semester business administration major, has been elected president of the recently organized Penn State Management Club at the club's first meeting.

Other officers are Joseph Captain, vice president, and David Bromley, secretary-treasurer.

front of the stations which had sold an approximate total of 30,000 tickets by the middle of the evening, according to Myron Enelow, Spring Week business manager.

In spite of some rain and a power failure, booths remained active throughout the evening. Coeds wore heavy coats between shows to protect themselves from the cold weather, which is predicted to continue today accompanied by scattered light showers.

The power failure was caused by an overloading of the circuits, according to electricians stationed on the Carnival grounds. Attempts will be made to guard against further power failure, according to Richard Grossman, Carnival co-chairman.

Town Name Change Is Old Controversy

State College residents have taken no action on the suggestion that the town's name be changed. And no wonder; the name has already been changed three times.

Earliest mention of the town on maps was "near Boalsburg", and mail came to "Farm School, Boalsburg." For 40 years it was officially a town without a name. Letters were postmarked "Farmers High School" until 1862 when the school changed its name, and letters came to the "Agricultural College."

In 1874 the Agricultural College became Pennsylvania State College and the issue of the town's name came up again. "Irvin," "Nittany," and "McAllister" were considered but the majority decided to continue calling the town after the school. In 1896 the town was incorporated as the Borough of State College. It was its first official name.

According to a poll conducted by the Centre Daily Times, the majority of residents voted against continuing the tradition of renaming the town when the school changes its name.

Other residents insist this is only sentimentality and that since the school's name isn't likely to change any more the town ought to change one more time.

And the "great debate" goes on.

Foreign Students Exam

Competitive examinations for the position of Foreign Service Officer have been announced by the Department of State. Written examinations for Pennsylvanians will be held September 13-16 in Philadelphia.

The closing date for applying to take the examination is July 1. Applications are available in the Department of Political Science office, 119 Sparks.

'Tux' Finalists Are Announced

Six finalists have been announced in the "Mr. Formal" contest, sponsored by a tuxedo manufacturer.

Finalists are Jay Gould, sponsored by Sigma Alpha Epsilon; Otto Schumann, sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha and Thompson Hall; William Curry, sponsored by Theta Xi and Kappa Delta; Ray Cluaser, sponsored by Pi Kappa Phi and Phi Mu; William Shields, sponsored by Sigma Phi Epsilon; and Lawrence Huntsman, sponsored by Phi Kappa Psi and Freshmen Women.

Penn State's "Mr. Formal" will be selected from the finalists by popular vote tonight at a special Carnival booth. He will win a complete summer formal outfit, a lighter, a cuff link and tie clasp set, and a pipe.

The finalists were chosen from photographs submitted by campus groups entering Spring Carnival by merchants Joseph Hur, Jack Harper, and Arnold Kalin.
