

Jet Show Is Halted By Weather

Although F-51 planes from Armed Forces Day parade Tuesday, the Thunder Jets which were scheduled to appear encountered bad weather conditions near Harrisburg and were forced to return to their base in Philadelphia.

The planes were again scheduled to fly over State College yesterday, but bad weather conditions throughout the state made jet flying impossible.

Thousands of people lined College avenue, from Shortlidge road to Burrowes road, the route of the march, to watch 4000 Reserve Officer Training Corps students from the University, and county organizations parade.

Rainy weather almost forced cancellation of the parade. More than 2500 Air Force ROTC, 1300 Army ROTC, and 350 Navy ROTC students were in the line of march, as well as members of ROTC honor groups.

PSCA Change

(Continued from page one) working papers state. They are: 1. The assets of PSCA. 2. Faculty, student, alumni, and other individual contributions. 3. Contributions of member agencies. 4. Such other contributions as are acceptable to the Board.

The Penn State Christian Association will continue to act as the corporate body of the University Christian Association, but will modify its structure to provide for full representation of the member agencies," the working papers state.

The papers also point out "Since the approach is frankly experimental and must evolve with experience, the form of organization will necessarily be of an interim character."

120-Member Band Being Considered

An increase in the size of the Penn State Blue Band from 96 to 120 members is being considered, James W. Dunlop, Band director, announced yesterday.

The increase must be approved by the Athletic Association, since the Blue Band works with the College of Physical Education and Athletics, Dunlop said. No definite action has been taken yet on the proposal.

"Most schools we meet field a band of 120 members," Dunlop said. "If we are to meet them athletically, then we may as well meet them numerically with our band, too."

Ag Hill to Host Judging Teams

Eighteen agricultural students who left yesterday on a practice livestock judging trip will play host to similar teams of six other universities Saturday when all seven teams stage a judging contest on Ag Hill.

Saturday's competition will include teams from Cornell, Rutgers, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maryland, and Ohio State universities, with a total of about 60 participants.

The University's entries in Saturday's contest will be chosen on the basis of scores achieved during the current judging trip, according to William L. Henning, head of the Animal Husbandry department.

On the present judging trip, stops are scheduled at Millbrook, N.Y., Rhinebeck, N.Y., and Cornell University. The students will return tomorrow night.

Saturday's judging contest has become almost an annual affair at the University because of the number of prize-winning stock the University owns, according to A. H. Imhof, assistant professor of agricultural journalism.

papers state, provided it agrees with two premises.

- These premises are that: 1. "It agrees with the basis and purposes (of the organization)." 2. "It provides all manner of support to the extent of its ability as it mutually agreed upon."

Two alumni initiated are James P. McKnight, farm manager of the Allentown State Hospital, and Robert H. Runler, executive secretary of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America, in Brattleboro, Va.

Fund Methods Disputed Another point of dissent stipulated by Haac was that of the methods of fund raising of the new organization. Under the preliminary working papers, the new organization will take over the assets of the PSCA as well as taking contributions from alumni and other groups.

Haac said that persons will be contributing to the University Christian Association with the idea that it is operated under the same nonsectarian principles as the PSCA. He said "They will contribute with knowing just the name, thinking it is like the old one (PSCA)."

Talks With Chaplain When we spoke to the Chaplain about the Unitarian group's affiliating with the new organization, Haac said he was told "I don't think you'd be happy in it."

Haac said that if the Unitarian and other fringe groups would join the new associations, it probably would be with the idea of "changing the basis to make it more inclusive." While in theory the organization's structure will be fluid for several years until it is definitely incorporated, he said, it will probably not be so in practice.

He said that the existing dogmatic basis leaves his group "little reason to join" if it cannot support this basis.

Haac also criticized the purposes of the new organization as set up in a recent edition of the Presbyterian newsletter. These, he said, are: to provide opportunity to the three major religious groups (Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish) and freedom to those other groups such as the Unitarians, Christian Scientists, etc."

The "etc.," he said, includes such organizations as the Greek Orthodox group, the Inter-Varsity Fellowships, and the Friends.

About 400 students will be excluded under this new organization, he said.
