

Council Continues Frosh Hours Study

By DOTTIE STONE

Freshman Council yesterday set up a committee to further investigate giving two special 11 o'clock permissions to second semester women with high scholastic averages.

Council unanimously voted to give some recognition to women who make good averages with their first semester, but it has not been decided whether this would be special hours.

The committee, headed by Margaret Boyd, second semester education major, will compare University hours with freshman hours at other schools and take a poll in the freshman dormitories to get student views.

Each council member will ask 15 to 20 women in her dorm unit the following questions:

1. Are you in favor of granting two special 11 o'clocks to second semester women with high scholastic averages?
2. If so, what grade do you think should be the basis for giving these permissions?
3. If not, what sort of recognition do you think should be given for high scholastic average?

Patricia J. Thompson, assistant to the dean of women, said the average in the poll should be in terms of letter grades, because confusion would occur if numbers were used and the new grading system is adopted.

It will be stressed to incoming women students next year that some recognition will be given for high averages. This will allow the committee to continue its work next semester rather than coming to a final decision this semester.

Miss Thompson asked the proposal not be pushed through in a hurry as information would have to be gathered and voted on by council Tuesday in order to present it to the final Woman's Student Government Association Senate meeting Wednesday.

Vote on whether to accept the proposal was split five to five. Because the feeling was not strong in one direction, the committee was formed to study the situation.

Janet Reid, town representative, felt granting special hours would not be fair to town women who had made good averages, as they are under parental control on hours. Barbara Stock, council chairman, said if these hours were given to freshmen, upperclasswomen would have the right to demand late permissions for the same average.

This was answered by Barbara Hendel, second semester chemistry major, who said upperclasswomen in WSGA had sent this as a proposal in the first place, thus giving their approval to the idea.

Engagements

Paintings Proposed For Senior Gift

By ANN LEH

(Fourth of a series of articles discussing the five proposals for the 1954 class gift.)

Seniors will be contributing to culture at the University if they vote for the fourth proposal for the 1954 senior class gift, the purchase of paintings for the new Student Union Building.

The five proposals, as well as the nominees for titles to be awarded senior men and women during class night activities, will be voted on next week. Voting will begin Monday and continue throughout the week at the Student Union desk in Old Main.

Series Would Be Exhibited
 The fourth gift suggestion calls for purchasing a series of paintings for exhibition in the new student building.

The paintings would pertain directly to the University. The exhibit would be composed of works by famous artists at the University, both staff members and graduates or would be a series of paintings showing the development of the Student Union building.

In the latter case, paintings would portray the planning stage, actual construction, and completion and use.

Selected by Committee
 According to George L. Donovan, director of student activities, art work for the new building would be selected by a committee acquainted with fine art.

The final proposal, a donation toward the establishment of a museum for the University or state, will be discussed in the final article tomorrow.
