

LA Courses Interrelated With Clubs

The many different fields in the College of the Liberal Arts provide clubs and honorary societies for interested students.

The clubs cover almost every course in the College. Any student in a particular course may join and further his education by attending meetings, discussions, and talks sponsored by the group. Several clubs have projects planned and participation in them can prove to be worthwhile.

Mock Security Council

Last year the International Relations Club sponsored a model Security Council with 35 representatives from 11 different colleges attending. Each college represented a different Security Council member.

The Slavic Club held a Christmas celebration at one of the fraternities. Slavic food was served and Slavic games and entertainment provided.

Other clubs include El Circulo Espanol, the Political Science Club, the Belles Lettres Club, Le Cercle Francais, the Philosophy Club, and the Inter-American Club.

Greek Honoraries

Various fields in the College are represented by honor societies. Students are invited to join these groups on the basis of scholarship and work done in the course. These groups are an honor and an award for scholastic achievement.

be subject to more serious disciplinary action.

Extending along Hamilton avenue to the south of the campus from near S. Paterson street to Pine street is an imaginary line. Students living beyond the line are considered as commuters and are given the appropriate parking permit.

Any traffic violations turned in by the Campus Patrol may be appealed at the student operated Traffic Court which meets weekly.

Traffic regulations in the borough of State College are comparable to those of any town of comparable size, with a few exceptions because of the great number of University students. Downtown parking is controlled by the parking meters until 5 p.m., except when merchants remain open to business after that time. Parking on streets in the residential districts is now the subject of some controversy because of the congestion which sometimes arises around some fraternity houses. It is possible that no parking at all may be permitted on these streets during the extent of the University's Centennial celebration, because of the large amount of visitors expected.

The speed limit on State College streets is set at 25 miles per hour, unless otherwise designated.

may be received after these hours. When using the dormitory phones, you may call anywhere on campus free of charge. The operator will ask for dormitory and you will give her the extension number of the place that you wish to call. A town call must be made from pay telephones in the halls.

All meals are served in the dining halls. Dining hall admittance is granted after your meal ticket number has been checked. The meal ticket must be presented at every meal. Meals in the dining halls are the same in all the dining halls on campus. The only difference occurs between men and women's meals. The men receive extra milk and more helpings of food.

The Food Service Building does all baking for the dining halls and orders all food to supply dining hall kitchens. Dairy products are received from the University's own dairy.

These are some of the high points of dormitory life that may have been puzzling you. Don't worry—everything will straighten out eventually . . .
