

Lions Seek 4th Win Today

By DICK McDOWELL
Penn State and West Virginia, two teams which love to beat each other, stir up a hurricane of their own this afternoon, when they meet on Beaver Field in the 34th annual Homecoming classic.

A record crowd, barring another outbreak of stormy weather, is expected to watch the Nittanians go after their fourth straight win of the season, and seventh in a string that began last season.

The Kickoff is scheduled for 2 p.m.

The Mountaineers, the last team to beat Penn State, moved into Lion Town yesterday with two consecutive wins behind them and probably stand as the Lions' biggest hurdle thus far in the still-young season.

than to avenge the one-point (20-19) loss Coach Art Lewis' gridders doled out at Beaver Field last year.

This one looks like a real test for Rip Engle's power-driven line. The West Virginia forward wall will average slightly more than 210 pounds, just a shade below the Lions' Lewis' line has been his biggest asset in wins over South Carolina and George Washington.

Both Use Split-T
Offensively it's split-T against split-T in this one and a quarterbacking duel looms between the Mountaineers much-heralded Freddy Wyant and Penn State's Don Bailey.

Most of the Lions' offensive punch, however, lies in halfbacks Lenny Moore and Ron Younker, ranked with the best running

Moore stands seventh among major college rushing leaders this week with 334 yards from scrimmage and has accounted for four Penn State scores.

Younker, a 170-pound spark plug, has picked up 194 yards in 15 carries this year for a fat 9.5 yard average.

Blockson at Fullback
Engle will send 218-pound Chuck Blockson to the fullback slot, replacing the injured Bill Straub.

In the line, Jesse Arnelle and Jim Garrity will be at the ends, Otto Kneidinger and Rosey Grier at the tackles, Earl Shumaker and Sam Valentine at guards and Don Balthaser at center. combinations in the nation.

The Mountaineers, Southern Conference champions last season, and heavy favorites to repeat this year, boast a veteran line, led by All-American candidates Gene Lamone and Bruce Bosley.

Passing Threat
Although they possess a strong running offense the Mounties are expected to use the air lanes frequently today. However, possible wet weather may keep them on the ground.

The Mountaineers are in danger of losing a win streak of their own this afternoon. They've won ten straight games on the road, discounting the 42-19 loss to Georgia Tech in the Sugar Bowl last year. (Continued from page six)

Location Approved For Construction Of Woman's Dorm

A group of new women's residence halls will be built on the area along E. Park avenue, between the eastern edge of Hort Woods and Shortlidge road.

The location, announced by President Milton S. Eisenhower, was determined jointly by the committee on architecture and the committee on buildings and grounds of the Board of Trustees. The executive committee of the board has approved the location.

Last month, the executive committee approved a program of planning for the construction of the residence halls, which will house 1000 coeds.

It is well known that the group of living units consist of four small buildings. Each building will be divided into two units with approximately 125 students in each unit. The building will be divided into two units with approximately 125 students in each unit. The buildings will have four floors, with 25 or 30 students on each floor.

The buildings will be grouped around a main dining hall, which will contain a central kitchen surrounded by four dining rooms. Each dormitory will be connected with the dining hall by a breezeway.

So far, architects have only completed preliminary sketches of the buildings.

Thompson Women to Move
When the new residence halls are opened, the 432 women living in Thompson Hall will move in. This would leave space for 570 additional women. Thompson Hall, opened in 1950, was originally planned to house men. However, due to the shortage of living space for women, it was converted to a coed dorm in 1951.

As soon as the women have been removed from Thompson Hall, men now living in Pollock Circle will move in. The Pollock dorms will then be torn down.

More Residence Halls
Eventually, University officials hope to construct another group of women's residence halls on the Pollock Circle area. If this is done, the dorms built on the Park avenue site will probably become residence halls for men.

Dean of Women Pearl O. Weston said she had heard of official plans for the construction of the new dorms. She said she would be glad to get any additional space for women on campus.

Dean Weston said there is a critical shortage of space for women, citing the situation which existed in Thompson Hall at the beginning of the fall semester.

Hurricane, Alumni Arrive Together

Nearly five inches of rain and 50 miles an hour wind gusts slammed the campus yesterday as Hurricane Hazel, thousands of alumni, and the first big weekend of the year arrived simultaneously.

Crews of workmen battled throughout the night attempting to keep damage to campus buildings and facilities light. No injuries were reported last night as a result of the storm.

Charles Hosler, head of the University meteorology department, reported that the hurricane passed within 50 miles of State College, just east of Harrisburg.

Wind gusts hit a high of 57 miles an hour at 4:30 p.m. The rainfall, at 11 p.m. measured 3.42 inches, a possible record for the campus for a 16-hour period.

Three trees in Hort Woods were knocked over in the storm, Walter W. Trainer, supervisor of lands construction and maintenance, said last night.

Campus roads became flooded when 60-inch drains were unable to carry off the rains. Branches and leaves from trees also clogged the drains.

The American flag in front of Old Main was ripped to shreds and carried off by the winds when the rope was broken in the storm. The Commonwealth flag was ripped, but salvaged.

Campus Patrol men were on duty all night and some 30 physical plant workers stood by to handle emergencies created by the heaviest rainstorm to hit the campus in several years.

Light showers and colder weather is expected today to greet thousands of alumni who poured into State College for homecoming festivities.

Fraternity pledges stood by last night and watched their week-long efforts—gigantic, but by no means waterproof, lawn displays—washed down the drain by the haughty Hazel. One fraternity, seeing its display ruined, posted a sign: "Hazel Was Here."

Commented one disappointed student: "The theme of this weekend is 'There's Been Some Changes Made.' Alumni will no doubt notice it hasn't been in the weather."

Among other weekend activities at the University, aside from flood and famine, will be the Nittany Lions' second home game with the Mountaineers of West Virginia, with kickoff time set for 2 p.m. today.

Thespians will present "Funny Side Up" for the last time at 8 tonight in Schwab Auditorium. Tickets are available for $1.25 at the Student Union desk in Old Main.

The annual Horticulture Show will be held from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. today, and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. tomorrow in the Stock Judging (Continued on page two)

Players Present 'Bell, Book, Candle'

By EDMUND REISS

Love and witchcraft held hands last night as Players presented its production of "Bell, Book, and Candle."

Taking John Van Druten's enchanting tale of present-day witches, Players did some magic of its own and turned what could have been a fast-moving, intriguing story into a slow, dragged-out affair.

The only point where the action picked up speed was in the third and final act when all the characters were on stage at once. However, as soon as a few left, the show settled back into the prevailing lethargic state.

Nevertheless, some fine portrayals were given, as that by Alice Petersen playing a young lady who is a very talented witch. Miss Petersen's primary fault seemed to be the slowness and general sloppiness which was characteristic of the show as a whole.

Minors Are Majors
It is unfortunate also that she couldn't have been supported with better talent, for the two most entertaining characters in the production were both minor roles. Nancy Shiffler, as Miss Petersen's witch-aunt, rendered what was probably the most enjoyable part seen.

Playing an elderly lady whose main enjoyment in life seemed to be playing pranks on unsuspecting persons, she bounced around almost succeeding in infusing into the play a spirit unfortunately lacking.

Tarnowski Fine
The other excellent role was that played by Leonard Tarnowski, and this also was a character part. In each of his two short scenes he was welcomed with a laughter that certainly was merited.

The main fault in the cast of "Bell, Book and Candle" was William Ghrist. As the brother of Miss Petersen, he seemed completely uninspired and offered only a horrible contrast to the other players.

Bill Taylor, playing the publisher who Miss Peterson causes to fall in love with her, has a completely different role from the rest of the cast. He is the straight (Continued on page eight)
