

Joint Committees Established by AIM

Three joint Association of Independent Men-Leonides committees were established Wednesday night by the AIM Board of Governors.

Representatives of the two independent student's groups will work together on the National Independent Students Association, social welfare, and football flashcard committees.

3. Today's challenge to the world is: "Learn to live together—or perish together."

4. "Dangerous though the times may be, I hold an optimism about the future." It is "by no means hopeless."

5. Nations which do not agree with the United States are not necessarily against this country. They must follow the dictates of their own public opinion. Citizens of the United States should realize this and develop "broad tolerance and great patience in thinking of and reacting to international relations."

6. To meet the "severe challenge of communism it is not enough to be against it . . . Arms alone are not enough . . . The most effective approach is a positive one."

The United Nations, Bunche pointed out, is an organization of human beings with human feelings and human failings. The people of the United States must realize this when they are prone to criticize the UN.

Bunche was introduced by President Milton S. Eisenhower as a "true citizen of the world."

His address, the climax of the second annual Career Day of the College of Business Administration, was broadcast by campus radio station WDFM and station WMAJ.

Junior Prom—

(Continued from page one) the chapel service on Sunday. The middle section will be reserved for juniors. Earl Seely and Eugenia Loeber will participate in the service.

The speaker will be Elsan Rees, secretary of the Commission on International Affairs, World Council of Churches, Geneva, Switzerland.

Ten Students Withdraw

Ten students, seven on campus and three at undergraduate centers, withdrew from the University from Sept. 24 to Oct. 23.

Reasons given for withdrawing were: personal, three; illness, three; transfer, one; scholastic, one; financial, one; and other reasons, one.

The joint NISA committee was approved because it was felt that when the University was represented at NISA conventions, it should speak as a unified delegation, not two delegations with different ideas. In the past, both AIM and Leonides have been represented at these conventions by separate delegations. As a result, there have been times when problems relating to the University have been discussed, and two delegations have presented different views.

Dean Says

James W. Dean, assistant to the dean of men in charge of independent affairs, said he felt more could be accomplished through NISA if students could agree to just what the problems on this campus were before consulting other schools.

The co-chairmen of the AIM committee are William Johnson and Robert Solomon. Members appointed Wednesday night were Has Simm, Robert Stoops, Jack Dunn, Fred Crawford, and Robert Sturdevant.

The joint social welfare committee will sponsor projects to benefit the community such as cleaning up playgrounds. It was explained that this committee will operate much like the Interfraternity-Panhellenic Council's work in setting up welfare projects for Greek Week.

Flashcard Section

The flashcard committee will investigate the possibilities of establishing an interest in a flashcard section at Beaver Field during home football games.

vided the audience with rib-tickling laughs every time he stepped aboard the stage.

Roberts Disappointing

The only disappointing member of the cast was Deane Lambing who, unfortunately, played the title role of Lt. (jg) Roberts. Lambing was fine as long as the drama did not begin to take a serious turn. But when this happened, he became very maudlin and caused great discomfort in the audience.

It is true that Lambing played a role different from most of the cast members in that he was supposed to represent the serious, honorable American youth whose main desire was to fight for his country. However, Lambing's serious moments certainly should not deserve special consideration because other somber parts of the play neatly brushed the sentimental and escaped this rather phony sadness that occurred in the Lambing scenes.

This is probably evidenced best by the ending of the show in which news of Roberts' ultimate death reached the crew of the cargo ship. This was a powerful moment in the play and was free from all mawkishness.

Other portrayals deserving mention were Cliff Crosbie as Doc, Emil Haas as Dowdy, Gerald Denisof as Insignia, and John Aniston as Mannion.

On the whole, Walter H. Walters, director of the show, has done a magnificent job in bring-if second semester freshman women were ruled eligible to rush, it is possible that sorority houses could be re-introduced on campus with a greater fairness.

Approximately half of the sorority could live in the house. Assuming that this would consist of junior and senior women, the remaining members would be living for two years in the dormitories. In this way freshman and sophomore Greek women would have the social advantages of a house and at the same time receive the benefits of dormitory life.

A solution has by no means been reached. But a problem has been recognized, which is probably the first step toward any remedy.

It is an enormous decision that faces sorority women, and one that cannot be decided upon hastily or haphazardly. It will require time . . . a great deal of time . . . for both frank group discussion and very intent and sincere thought. So be it.
