Grow a Beard; Become Famous?

By LARRY JACOBSON

While looking through some old, dusty history books at dozens of hazy photogravures, one gets the impression that possession of a beard (here we go again) in "the good old days" was a prerequisite to becoming famous.

The two men who were instrumental in establishing the University wore beards. Abraham Lincoln, president of the United States from 1861-1865, signed the land-grant act which enabled the University to grow; and Evan Pugh, first president of the University, did much during his tenure to further the University's name. Other presidents of the University who wore beards were William H. Allen, 1864-66; John Fraser, 1866-68; Thomas H. Burrowes, 1868-71; James Calder, 1871-80; Joseph Shortlidge, 1880-81; and George W. Atherton, 1882-1906.

Presidents Wore Beards

Of course, 'Honest Abe' wasn't the only United States' president to sport a chin growth. As a matter of fact, almost every U.S. president until the late 1800's wore a beard. Ulysses S. Grant was not only a president, but also a famous general in the U.S. Army. How Grant managed to get around the Reserve Officers' Training Corps regulation banning beards is still an unsolved mystery.

Jefferson Davis, that rebel revolutionary and president of the southern confederacy, was never seen in public without his "long mane." And who will ever forget the "Gentleman of the South," General Robert E. Lee? Lee was said to have taken meticulous care of his beard as any picture will show.

Smith Brothers, Too

On the lighter side of things, how about those wizards of licorice, the Smith Brothers? They started way back in the late 1800's. Their product is still going strong, and so are their beards, as one can see by looking on the box. Of course, you can't forget the granddaddy of them all, Old Saint Nick. Year after year he comes through with the top beard in the country. But you must remember that he's the world's oldest beard-grower and therefore has the most experience.

Yes, those were the good old days, when men wore beards and women suffered. Perhaps it is best that those days are gone. After all, where would the Gillette Safety Razor Company be?

ROTC--

(Continued from page one) group to support the Beards-for-Centennial movement. It passed a resolution Thursday night requiring all members to grow beards unless previous commitments interfered.

Post Office--

(Continued from page one) fice in Washington will send officials to the University Jan. 28 to look over proposed quarters in the basement of the HUB.

3. The University's post office will be listed separately in future postal guides.

4. The post office cancellation will be placed at the State College post office and will bear the words "State College, Pa.," as well as the new name.

5. Datelines of all stories concerning the University going out through the mails and via Western Union will bear the name of the new University post office.

6. The trustees have virtually eliminated consideration of "Mt. Nittany" as a name, feeling that residents have already rejected it.

ROTC Officer Visits University

Col. Franklin S. Pruyn of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps Headquarters, Montgomery, Ala., is visiting the University this week.

Colonel Pruyn is representing Major Gen. M. K. Deichmann, commander of the Air Force ROTC program. He will discuss the program at the University with Col. Daniel F. Riva, professor of air science and tactics, and University officials.

Titan, the largest satellite of Saturn, is the only moon in the solar system to have an atmosphere.

'Battle of Sexes'

Figuring that a baby sitter for the day a week the wives takes off will cost $6, meals $2, movies, $1, and cabs, tips, etc., $1—the men claim that by their golden wedding anniversary they could save $25,000 by keeping the wife home seven days a week.

The men quoted Joan Crawford as saying: "Everyone has heard of the Bill of Rights; 'I'm fighting for the rights of Bill.' They agreed with Miss Crawford.

The all-for-fun debate was modified by Dr. Harold J. O'Brien, professor of public speaking at the University.

Who won? Who always wins?
