

Senator Hays Speaks On State Assembly

By DON BARLETT

Jo Hays, State Senator from State College, told Faculty Luncheon Club members that it is his responsibility to carry out the views of the more than 150,000 people he represents in the Centre and Clearfield county areas in the General Assembly at Harrisburg.

Hays, in his address "Thirty Minutes in the Pennsylvania General Assembly," said the only issue to come up before both houses has been the unemployment-compensation issue. Hays explained that when the balance in the unemployment compensation treasury drops to a prescribed level, compensation is reduced.

Both Parties Blamed

He said at the present time both parties are blaming each other for the situation. In New York, Hays said, this situation has been remedied by depositing more money in the treasury when times are good, thus there was no need to cut the compensation payments when times are bad.

On the lighter side of the senator's address, he said the occupations of members of the General Assembly vary from that of a lawyer to that of a veterinarian.

Other items which Hays expects to come up before the Assembly are government reorganization, taxes, educational matters, and better use of health examinations in the state's high schools.

Faculty Cooperating

In reference to work being done by faculty members at the University, Hays noted that faculty members from both Penn State and the University of Pittsburgh are cooperating in helping the change-over from the Fine administration to the Leader administration. Hays said these men are doing this work without compensation.

Hays said he had been contacted by people from this area on matters concerning jobs people wanted, scholarships, and roads.

Hays, in describing his first day at the Assembly, said it was rather disappointing. Humorously he recalled that on three roll call votes, which were 26 to 23, he was in the minority. However, on the fourth roll call vote, he voted with the majority, 49 to 0, in favor of paying the salaries of the members of the General Assembly.

Administers Oath

The oath of office was administered by Judge Woodring, a former Penn State cheerleader, Hays said.

The newly elected faculty luncheon club steering committee is Dr. George Brandow, professor of Agriculture economics; Dr. G. K. Gillan, professor of civil engineering; Dr. Vaclav Mares, associate professor of economics; Virginia Britton, professor of family economics; and Avelyn Hensel, assistant librarian.

Boys Boost Beards; Council Cans Coeds

By LARRY JACOBSON

It seems as though the "beard movement" is the hottest thing to hit campus this year. But a bigger sideshow has developed, the controversy now raging between the men and women as to whether or not the men should grow beards. Here's the latest.

Nittany Council has composed a letter and sent it to the Daily Collegian. The letter, titled "The Nittany Council vs. The Nauseous Girls," offers five helpful suggestions for coeds suffering from "Traditionitis".

The letter states that since "you girls are college material . . . we like to think that it is within your mental capacity to understand these factors:

1. A Centennial . . . comes once in a hundred years. Right?
2. A person will witness only one . . .
3. It is tradition . . . for the men to grow beards for their Centennials.
4. Women have beauty contests every year to show off what maturity has brought them. Men may have the chance only once in a lifetime to display their beards as their mark of manliness, and yet you (girls) put up a bitter protest. Come now ladies, your selfishness is showing.

5. The Nittany Council is wholeheartedly supporting the "Beards for Centennial" movement. We feel that other governmental bodies . . . will follow suit."

The letter expresses the feeling that women, instead of criticizing, should do something to add to the festivities; and closes the statement "So come on girls, forget about extracting kisses from under beards. What can you do to add to the festivities?"

Interesting letter, eh what? One of the most interesting observations heard so far was made by a high school student walking down Allen street. The youth commented to his pal: "Them girls who are complaining about the guys growing beards probably never went out with a boy in their life."

The battle of the sexes rages on. Who will win? Nobody knows.

Anybody heard of any 'un-pinnings'?

SEEMS . . . there's a fellow named McCartney from a house called Lambda Chi Alpha. You may have heard of it. Well anyway, he came storming up here when he heard that George Zafis, social chairman of Sigma Phi Epsilon received some notoriety in this column about being on the ball for Saturday night party pictures. Well, the outcome is a public apology. Yes, there is another house which must have its share of fame. After doing their parties for the past few years, it must be stated that the house called Lambda Chi Alpha (or something like it) was once ready and waiting for the photographer. Are we even now, Gordon?

Just returned yesterday from a two week ski jaunt in Canada where the snow is a heavenly 52 inches deep and where the women are as beautiful as they are rugged. Anyway the silence of the deep snow on the mountain tops is somewhat conducive to meditation of a sort. It gave me a chance to give some objective critical analysis of our work. Of the several ideas of improvement during this pensiveness came one disturbing factor. Namely, that many of our coed sittings often disqualify themselves from a really fine portrait (that is, their potential for it) by insisting on the use of shoulder drapes. They are not meant for every girl. Looks alone are perhaps the least of the governing factors. The so called "drape type" must have physical features which are enhanced by drapes. Besides a flattering bust line, she must possess perfect shoulders, no protruding bones, a slim neck, etc. Unless the girl is ideal for drapes, you'd be surprised how the poses are confined to variations on just a few themes. It's this being confined that I want to rebel against. I want to be able to use all the potential and it simply can't be done unless you are definitely the type for drapes.

Sometimes the motivating factor for drapes is the boy friends desire for a "sexy" pose. Fine for some girls but isn't a tailored blouse with a plunging neck line and a mandarin collar much more subtle? Check the engagement pictures in the New York Times. It's always a blouse. It should be a soft material such as silk, nylon, orlon, jersey or anything but cotton. It should be long sleeved, with an attractive collar. The neckline is up to you. Keep away from Peter Pan collars unless you have a very slim face. Better yet, bring a few other blouses besides the one you wear. Keep away from print.

I can't figure out why girls don't wear their evening gowns for portraits. There is a certain elegance that nothing but an evening gown will give. It's the transition of a pretty girl to a beautiful young woman.

No. I don't want to discourage drapes. They're wonderful for the right type of girl and simply detrimental to others. So when making your appointment, please give the above mentioned some thought.

Perhaps the motivation of this note is somewhat selfish. You see, we want to be thoroughly satisfied that the portraits leaving this studio not only please you but gives us an inner satisfaction as well.

Most sincerely,
b. c.
