

Buchanan to Discuss Marriage Problems

By INEZ ALTHOUSE

Helen E. Buchanan, instructor in family relations, will speak on "Is Love Enough?" at the final session of the Marriage Conference at 7:30 tonight in Simmons Lounge.

Miss Buchanan will discuss adjustments that must be made after marriage and problems that may arise.

Miss Buchanan received her B.S. degree in home economics from the University of Arkansas, and her M.A. in sociology from the same institution. At present she is working on her Ph.D. at the University.

Upon completion of her studies at the University of Arkansas, Miss Buchanan served as a home demonstration agent in Arkansas. She was elected to a term in the Arkansas state legislature, and was author of the first marriage bill of that state, requiring a three-day period between application and receipt of a marriage license.

Did Church Work

Miss Buchanan also was educational director and youth worker for two years for a Baptist church in Prescott, Ark. She served as editorial assistant on the Arkan-

She also was dean of women and director of public relations at Central College in North Little Rock, Ark. Before coming to the University last fall, she taught civics and home economics for three years in Springdale, Ark.

Last Meeting of Conference

Tonight is the last meeting of the second annual three-day marriage conference.

The conference is open to the public. A coffee hour will follow Miss Buchanan's talk.

Other speakers in the conference included Dr. Clifford R. Adams, professor of psychology, who spoke on pre-marital adjustments and selecting a mate Tuesday night. Last night Rabbi Benjamin M. Kahn, director of Hillel Foundation, and the Rev. Luther H. Harshbarger, University Chaplain, spoke on the social, cultural, and religious effects of an inter-faith marriage. Also on last night's program was a talk by Dr. Winona L. Morgan, professor of child development, on the effects of an inter-faith marriage on children.

Interfaith Marriage Discussed By Group

By MARNIE SCHENCK

Interfaith, or mixed, marriages were discussed last night by the Reverend Luther H. Harshbarger, University chaplain; Rabbi Benjamin M. Kahn, director of Hillel Foundation; and Dr. Winona L. Morgan, professor of child development, at the second session of the annual Marriage Conference.

The three speakers agreed that there was more to the discussion of mixed marriage than who would perform the ceremony. They said that religion in the family should not be thought of in separate units.

Rabbi Kahn and Rev. Harshbarger both said that three major religions frown on mixed marriages and all have rules governing them.

Both said, however, that many young people go into the problem of solving the religious differences without proper knowledge of their own faith. Religion is the basis of meaning and framework of a marriage, they said. "They said that the vows are absolute, not to be entered into with the idea of a trial.

There is a difference in purpose of marriage as stated in some religions, Rev. Harshbarger pointed out. He said that obviously one purpose of all is propagation of the species, but asked if it is the only one. In the Jewish and Protestant religions, as he sees them, there is the purpose of self-fulfillment. Marriage brings out self-expression of each member through the other.

Each religion establishes a moral obligation upon the member to bring up his child in the best religious tradition which he knows, Rev. Harshbarger said and transferring the privilege of doing this does not release the obligation.

Harshbarger Offers Advice

Rev. Harshbarger offered advice to those who wish to marry but are of different faiths. "You owe it to each other to go profoundly and deeply into the traditions of your own and the other religion. Many youths have no deep rooted convictions and they should have them first before they discuss the problem.

"Then you may find a common faith and tradition to believe in; if you do, forget the past to go on together."

He urged that one member not change just for the other, but to do so on his own convictions.

No Children—No Settlement

Dr. Morgan, speaking from the point that the mixed marriage had already been consummated, said that a couple could not solve the problem by just deciding not to have any children.

Dr. Morgan pointed to three things which she felt should be done in bringing up the children:

1. The parents should emphasize the points of agreement which their religions have and help the child see them. Many points are mere details which are

'Sweetheart' Photo Entries Due Tomorrow

Tomorrow is the deadline for submitting entries in the Independent Sweetheart Contest. Five by 7 inch photographs of candidates should be turned in at the Student Union desk, Old Main, by 5 p.m.

The Independent Sweetheart will be crowned at the Spring Dance sponsored by Leonides and the Association of Independent Men. The dance, to be held March 18, will be the climax of Independent Week. It will be the first major student dance in the Hetzel Union Building.

Johnny Nicolosi and his orchestra will play for the dance.

really not worth worrying about.

2. The child should be thoroughly grounded in one or the other religions. It is impossible to bring up a child without a religion and allow him to decide later. If he departs later in life he needs something to depart from.

3. A child needs to feel that he belongs to something outside the family and the church gives him another area of belonging.

Co-Edits

Ten pledges of Lambda Chi Alpha took paint brushes in hand Sunday afternoon and went to work on the Ferguson Township School.

The work day went along with the fraternity's idea of combining pledge training with worthwhile community service.

Janet Fitzgibbon has been pledged by Beta Sigma Omicron. Gamma Phi Beta held its province conference on March 4, 5, and 6 at the Nittany Lion Inn. Representatives from chapters at Syracuse University, Boston University, University of Toronto, McGill University, and University of Vermont attended. Members of the alumnae chapters of the province also attended. Hostesses for the conference were the alumnae and active chapter of Gamma Phi Beta at the University.

Phi Mu recently held a service in honor of its founding on March 4, 1852 at Westlyan College, Macon, Georgia. After the service a party was held for the active sisters, the alumnae, and the sorority patroness in the suite.

Gamma Phi Beta recently entertained Delta Gamma at a "come as you are" party in the sorority suite. Gamma Phi Beta also recently entertained Pi Kappa Phi in the Grange game room. Officers recently installed at Theta Chi are Robert Baker, pledge marshal, and Ronald Hansen, treasurer.

Thru the Looking Glass with Gabbi

Life can get pretty routine, can't it? Even a place as exciting as University Park can get dull after a fashion; it's really a boost to have a metropolis like Bellefonte so near. But then, there's always party-time here and elsewhere and ETHELS has just the accessories to make it a winner!

Necessary, novel, but still a napkin

Heading the hit parade of conversational aids are the napkins tagged "Cordials"—poetic and clever, each one has attached a tiny trinket typifying the verse. And you don't have to finish the whole box of Crackerjacks to get your surprise!

If you don't have your own kid brother at home, you must have had a horrible experience with a Dennis the Menace sometime. Now you can laugh your way thru Dennis Dear's "adorableisms" in a set of cocktail napkins. The artist gives this little misunderstood kid a worse going over than the campus gives a drama critic reviewing a Penn State production. And then there's Rosalind Welcher (of PandraPrint fame) who designed 2 types of napkins—"Main Street, 1900" and "Gaité Parisienne" Shades of Moulin Rouge (and Simmons Hall)!

Use this instead of your slip

Is what we should label these powder room towels that are the last word in convenience 'cause they come in their own plastic holder ready to hang. Gaily decorated with kissing bugs (gorsh, real live ones), captioned with "Be a sweetheart, use this towel." Others dance with colored horses and the 11th commandment, "Don't horse around!" See ya in the funnies . . .
