Changes in Security Program Asked

WASHINGTON, March 18 (AP)—An editor and a former senator called today for broad changes in the government's security program. They described its growth as "dangerous" and "octopus-like."

J. Russell Wiggins, vice president and managing editor of the Washington Post and Times-Herald, warned a Government Operations subcommittee that while the need for secrecy is greater in today's world "the dangers of secrecy therefore are also greater than ever before."

At another meeting, former Republican Sen. Harry P. Cain of Washington advocated the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to work out uniform standards and procedures and to annul "the marriage between security and politics."

Cain expressed his views in an address prepared for the 7th annual Conference on Civil Liberties, sponsored by about 50 organizations. Conference chairman is Paul Sifton of the CIO Auto Workers Union.

Wiggins, chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, expressed concern about the extent of secrecy in atomic, military and other federal programs.

Wiggins contended the government should provide penalties for too much secrecy as well as for too little.

Sen. George M. Humphrey (D-Minn), subcommittee chairman, is holding hearings on his proposal that a special commission be created to study all phases of the security program.

If such a body is formed, Wiggins said, it should "weigh soberly" these contentions:

"That secrecy is seldom as effective as imagined; that it is incompatible with freedom; that it may foster an ignorant public, and that 'it may deny an enemy knowledge of our defense potential that, if known to him, would restrain his own aggression.'"

Cain, now a member of the Subversive Activities Control Board, criticized those who use the term "Fifth Amendment Communist" to describe a person who invokes the constitutional right against self-incrimination. He said persons who use that term are "as guilty of disrespect for the Constitution as any Communist would be."
