Style Changes Seen In Hats for Spring

By MARY BOLICH
Collegian Assistant Society Editor

While a woman's hair is her crowning glory, the hat she wears is an important part of that glory and on even more important part in completing her wardrobe.

With Easter just around the corner it is time for young women to start thinking about their new chapeaux.

This year will bring a brighter Easter. "Strong colors and fragile fabrics will be the stylish signs of spring hats," Life magazine reports.

Flowers adorning milady's hat have almost been done away with this year. New York milliners have come up with simpler but more stunning hats. Small hats are still the favorite, but the big-brimmed style has not been forgotten. The big-brimmed hats now come with a snug-fitting separate cap worn beneath it.

The "two-part" hat has also been matched with a two-part dress. One of the separates can be removed, turning the outfit into an evening dress.

Young-looking rollers which tie under the chin, designed by John Fredericks, will be popular this year. If you remember, this was the kind of hat mother made you wear when you were still wearing your dresses above your knees.

Soft silk and organdy over straw will be seen on a lot of women in the Easter Parade. These styles come in the sporty shapes and are worn with tailored suits which are also brighter in hue.

One of Mr. John's latest creations is to use starched veiling on a small disc-shaped hat. The veiling is usually used just for trimming.

Color will definitely be emphasized above everything else in the woman's wardrobe this spring. Along with suits, dresses, and hats, ladies shoes will be brighter. Pinks, blues, oranges, and natural will be dominant.
