REPRESENTING THE UNIVERSITY in the seventh annual Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Reading Festival are, left to right, Lynn Slaboski, Elizabeth Jones, and Ferne Stone. The first session of the festival began yesterday and will end today with the reading of drama at 1:30 p.m. in the Mineral Science auditorium.

Two Events to End 7th Reading Festival

The seventh annual Pennsylvania Intercollegiate Reading Festival will come to a close today after completion of the last two reading events.

The prose reading division will begin at 10:00 a.m. today in the Mineral Science auditorium. The University will not be represented in this section of the festival. Angelo Collura, sixth semester arts and letters major, will act as chairman.

Among the selections that will be heard are "The Cask of Amontillado," by Edgar Allan Poe; "Reminiscences of Childhood," by Dylan Thomas; and Hamlet, Act II, Scene 2, by William Shakespeare.

Drama Division

At 1:30 p.m. the drama reading division will begin. Representing the college in this division will be Ferne Stone, fourth semester arts and letters major, who will read "The Moon Is Blue," by F. Hugh Herbert. Other selections to be heard in this division will include "The Devil and Daniel Webster" by Stephen Vincent Benet, "Of Mice and Men" by John Steinbeck, and "Cyrano de Bergerac," by Edmond Rostand. Chairman for this group of readings will be Robert Smith, third semester education major.

The Reading Festival began yesterday morning with the poetry division. Elizabeth Jones, sixth semester arts and letters major, represented the University in this division.

Banquet Held

After the opening session a banquet was held at the Nittany Lion Inn with James Demchack, ninth semester arts and letters major, acting as master of ceremonies.

A reading hour was held last night in the Mineral Science auditorium. The University was represented by Helene Slaboski, sixth semester arts and letters major.
