

73 Coeds to Participate In May Day Ceremonies

Seventy-three coeds will participate in the May Day ceremonies at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow in front of Old Main.

Faith Gallagher, eighth semester sociology major, will be crowned May Queen by Patricia Ellis, Women's Student Government Association president.

Nine former May Queens and 10 former WSGA presidents will head the processional. Sara Cushman, vice president of Women's Recreation Association, will lead the ex-queens, and Margaret Forster, WSGA vice president, will lead the ex-presidents.

Nancy Scofield and Rosemary Short will be senior attendants for Miss Gallagher. Cecelia Yarnall and Mary Ann Spangler are junior attendants; Sandra Stover and Anne Cain, sophomore attendants; and Avis Dunkelberger and Eleanor Woodward, freshman attendants. Katherine Dickson is Freshman Maid of Honor. Mary McComb and Gretl Yeager will be flower girls and Roddy Freed and Bobby Burcik will act as trainbearers. They were chosen from children in the Nursery School.

McCowan Will Present World
Mildred McCowan, WRA president, will present the queen with the traditional world, and Mary Kerr, representing University Christian Association, will present the scepter.

Margaret Remley, second semester arts and letters major, and Maria Turo, second semester psychology major, will be heralds. Jesters will be acted by Charlotte Klippel, sixth semester physical education major, and Patricia Olkkonen, seventh semester recreation education major.

Thirty-six senior women will form the traditional hemlock chain, and 20 outstanding senior women will form the honor arch for the queen and her court.

Schuhplattlers to Perform
The Schuhplattlers, a folk dancing group, will present several dances. Other entertainment will be provided by members of Tau Kappa Epsilon and Kappa Alpha Theta, winners of the Interfraternity Council-Panhellenic Council Sing.

Two maypoles will be wound by freshman and sophomore women.

May Day is sponsored annually by WSGA. Kay Kingsley, vice president of WSGA Senate, is general chairman of the program. Jeanne Lindaman, assistant to the dean of women, is faculty adviser of the event.

University Pioneers With HEc Houses

A leader in the field of home economics education, the University was one of the first to incorporate home management houses in the home economics program.

It was in 1919 that the first building, Hillcrest House, was secured for the practical application of home management. Each month a group of eight women students and an adviser lived in the house. It was the students' duty to plan the entire management of the house, to divide the work among themselves, and to plan a budget which allowed 50 cents per day for each woman.

In 1932, the second house, Benedict, was opened for the women's use and almost a decade later a third house, Beecher, was opened. In the fall of 1953 a fourth house, Schlow house, was rented to allow for expansion. This newest addition, located on College avenue, is the only home management house off campus.

Plans have been made for four new units to be built on the point of the campus near the nuclear reactor. Three buildings will be erected. Two will be ranch type houses and the third will be a two story house consisting of two separate units. According to plans, the buildings will be of frame construction with wood and brick exterior and slate roofs. No date has been set for construction, but workmen have begun drilling for foundation tests.

The present program, as carried out in Hillcrest, Benedict, Beecher, and Schlow houses, provides practical experience in all phases of home management. Women students who are seniors and juniors majoring in home economics set up a cooperative plan for the management of the house. Each student gets experience in marketing, cooking, cleaning, infant care, and purchasing household equipment and furnishings. Each house is temporary home for a baby, usually under one year old, who is cared for by the students in the house.

There is a house adviser in each unit, whose capacity is that of professor, house mother, and friend all in one. The present advisers are Jeanne Riebel, Hillcrest; Frances Henderson, Beecher; Yurriel Starr, Benedict; and Janice Chennault, Schlow.
