

Rebuilding of Cabin Is Gift Suggestion

By SUE CONKLIN

This is the second in a series of five articles on the final lectures for the senior class gift.

Excursions to the country are the latest thing in recreation at Penn State. The senior class gift committee goes along with this idea in suggesting a recreational lodge for students.

The University owned a cabin near Boalsburg which burned down in 1942. The foundation for the cabin still remains along with $7200 of insurance to be collected.

Six Seniors In NROTC Get Awards

Six seniors enrolled in the Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps were presented awards at a special Armed Forces Day ceremony in Schwab Auditorium last Thursday.

Robert Conquest, senior in psychology from Richmond, Va. was awarded the Sixth Annual Reserve Officers' Association Medal, which is based on outstanding aptitude and leadership.

Vincent Skrinak, senior in civil engineering from Portage, was awarded the Navy League Plaque and Society of Military Engineers Gold Medal for the highest naval science average and as the outstanding engineering senior in NROTC.

Robert Smoot, senior in chemical engineering from Baltimore, Md., was chosen for the U.S. Naval Institute Annual Award for the highest combined aptitude and naval science average, of a regular NROTC student. He was also awarded the Fourth Naval District Annual Award for the highest naval navigation average.

Richard Davidson, senior in arts and letters from Pittsburgh, was presented the U.S. Naval Institute Annual Award for the highest combined aptitude and naval science average for a naval science contract student.

Robert E. Soloman, senior in industrial engineering from Sarver, received the Marine Corps Asso-

The idea for the cabin originated with a former class gift of $5000. Proof of the enthusiasm present at this time was the additional $3000 which was collected to build the cabin. The original plans included a larger building with a dormitory setup. These plans were never fully carried out. The cabin when it burned had cost $8000 and the completion of the plans would total $20,000 to $30,000.

The University owns eight acres surrounding the cabin. This could be used for recreational purposes if a new cabin were erected. A ski track is also present and was used by the ski club at that time. The club no longer uses the track. Picnic areas are abundant on the eight acres. Facilities for archery and baseball could be easily set up.

The original cabin had the conveniences of running water, gas, and electricity. The sight is an approximate 15-minute drive from the campus. It is in the mountains.

When the cabin was in operation it was under the supervision of the College of Physical Education. Ray M. Conger, associate professor of physical education, supervised most of the details.

Conger said he would be willing to supervise such an operation again if it were voted by the senior class.

When the cabin was in operation it was under the supervision of the College of Physical Education. William Happersett, senior in electrical engineering from Upper Darby, was presented the Armed Forces Communications Association Gold Medal for the outstanding senior NROTC student majoring in electrical engineering.

tion there was a great demand for its use, and it was occupied about three times each week. Groups had to sign up for its use to alleviate confusion. The Cabin was available to faculty groups, student groups, fraternities, sororities, and outside groups.

If a new lodge were being considered, new plans could be drawn or the same ones could be followed. The foundation of the old cabin could be used as well as the money from the insurance.

Seniors will vote on the five final senior gift suggestions when they receive their copies of La-Vie. La-Vie will be ready for distribution on approximately June 1, George L. Donovan, director of associated student activities, said yesterday.
