New Shelves Installed In Library

Pattee Library is undergoing minor decorations completing a program started last year to paint and "clean-up" the entire building.

Two reading rooms are being painted and wall shelves installed, and painting in two basement rooms, a conference room, and a room housing the Penn State Collection is included in the plans.

The walls and ceiling of the large reserve book room to the left of the main entrance has just been painted. Also 24 sections of shelves are to be installed.

Painting in the reading and newspaper room to the right of the main entrance is just about completed, with the window frames yet to be finished. Some 38 sections of wall shelving is to be installed in that room. Each shelf section is three feet wide and has six movable shelves.

Two basement classrooms have been painted, and the room in the Penn State collection is yet to be started.

Equipment is being installed in the conference room, to the right of the newspaper reading room, to prepare for a rare book and special collections room. The rare book collections are presently in the vault in the basement.

Librarian Ralph McCoomb said the shelves are being placed in the reading rooms in hopes that reserve books will be placed on them. However, he said, this plan is not definite because some system of supervision probably would have to be worked out which would prevent students from taking the books out of the library.

Seating--

Seely also reminded the students "that the misconduct of a few casts an adverse reflection on the entire student body."

AA officials have said that the reserved seat plan, which was announced Sept. 14 and later changed, would be put into effect again if students continued section-jumping.

Description of Plan

Under the reserve seat plan, students were presented special tickets at registration containing a certain section, row, and seat in which they would have had to sit.

Under the compromise plan, which is in effect now, students will have to honor only the section printed on the tickets, not the row and seat. Students must enter Beaver Field today through the gate leading to their assigned sections, AA officials have announced.

Plan Followed Talks

The compromise plan was worked out after talks between Seely; Harold R. Gilbert, AA director; Ernest B. McCoy, dean of the College of Physical Education and Athletics; and Douglas Moorehead, AA president.

McCoy told Seely Thursday night that exchanges for wrong sections for seniors could be made. McCoy was telephoned during a Cabinet recess called by Seely. Seely called the recess after several Cabinet members brought up the "wrong-section" problem.

University Drops 519 At Semester's End

Five hundred and nineteen students were dropped from the University at the end of the Spring semester, according to C. O. Williams, dean of admissions and registrar.

Combined with 236 flunkouts at the end of last fall's semester, a total of 755 students were dropped for the school year. This is more than 100 students more than the 623 who were dropped during the academic year of 1953-54.

Williams said that between seven and eight per cent of the student body is dropped during the school year. The number of flunkouts runs about the same every year, he added.

Under Old Scale

All scholastic action taken during the spring semester was under the old grading system, Williams said. The new grading scale went into effect this fall.

In other scholastic action taken at the end of the spring semester, 777 students were placed on academic probation and 645 were referred into the Division of Intermediate Registration.

The students were dropped from the University for four reasons: holding an All-University average below 1.0, under the old system, flunking at least 50 per cent of scheduled credits; on recommendation by a student's college; and failure to enter a college after two semesters.

Of the 519 drop-outs, 447 students were men and 72 were women. Since the end of the spring semester, 21 of the 519 students were reinstated into the University, Williams said. Ten of the 21 entered the two year associate degree program.

Academic Probation

Eighty-two of those placed on probation were women and 695 were men. Academic probation, which lasts a semester, can be invoked if a student's All-University average falls below 1.65, if he fails 35 per cent of his credits for a semester, or if his college takes special action.

Although students may voluntarily enter DIR, only those holding a 1.5 All-University average by the end of their third semester or referred by their colleges are guilty of scholastic action. Of the 645 accepted by DIR, 562 were men and 83 were women.

Young Republicans To Organize Tuesday

The Penn State Young Republican Club will hold an organizational meeting at 7 p.m. Tuesday in 212 Hetzel Union.

John Higgins, club president, will present a report of the Young Republican National Convention held in Detroit, Mich., in June.

Students interested in the club may attend the meeting.
