third. The violation concerned a verbal invitation to a coffee hour to a rushee by a sorority member rather than through the Panhellenic post office.

Judicial To Meet

The Judicial committee will meet Wednesday to hand down its decision, according to Miss Caruso. She said that the decision was not made yesterday because she was unable to contact all the members of the committee. She also said that a report has been made to the National Panhellenic Association for possible recommendation of penalty. This violation has never occurred before, she said.

The Panhellenic rushing code specifies that all rushing violations be dealt with by the judicial committee comprised of the officers of the council, a representative from the dean's office, a stray Greek (a sorority member whose sorority has no chapter at the university), and the Panhellenic rushing chairman.

Procedure Requires Complaint

The procedure for reporting a violation requires that two copies of the complaint be given to the committee by the sorority reporting the violation. One is signed and kept by the committee; the other is unsigned and given to the accused group. The accused group is given a chance to present its case before the committee. The committee then investigates both sides and hands down its decision.

Bids Out Today

Coffee hours Sunday night ended the major part of formal rushing. Only bidding and ribboning today and tonight remain on the rushing agenda. A semi-strict silent period is still in effect, however, between sorority members and rushees until bids go out this afternoon.

The rushees signed their preferential cards Sunday night between 10 and 12 in their residence hall following the coffee hours. The sorority bid lists were turned in Monday morning at 10 to the dean of women's office.

More Time Allowed

Pearl O. Weston, Dean of Women, said the time lapse this year between the turning in of the bid lists and picking up of the accept lists was a day longer to allow for a doublecheck of preferences and bids. This, she said, would eliminate mistakes, such as last year when two girls were ribboned by the wrong sorority.

The bid lists will be given to the sorority rushing chairmen at 4 p.m. today in the dean of women's office. Bids will be distributed at approximately 5 p.m. and contrary to the rushing handbook will be slipped under the women's doors not picked up at the office of the dean of women. Ribboning will take place at 7 tonight in the suites.

Centennial Lore

Campus Plagued by Misnomers

One of the ironies of the University's history is that for many of its one hundred years, the institution operated under a misnomer.

When it was offering work of collegiate rank and granting bachelor's degrees, it was called the Farmers' High School of Pennsylvania.

Later when most of its students were studying engineering and the sciences, it was called the Agricultural College of Pennsylvania.

Then, for nearly 80 years, while it was a great educational institution larger than many universities, it was still known as a college.

Proposed by Society

The name, Farmers' High School, was proposed by the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society, which was the prime mover in the establishment of the institution in 1855.

This designation was chosen "partly in a feeling that the farmers might be prejudiced against the word 'college' as that of a place where boys contracted idle habits."

Finally on May 6, 1862, the Board of Trustees made formal application to the Centre County Court, which approved the change of name to The Agricultural College of Pennsylvania. Promoted 1862 Act

One of the principal motives behind the trustees' action was their desire for the school to share in the benefits of the Morrill Land Grant Act of 1862, which they had been actively promoting. This Act allocated revenues from public lands to "colleges" teaching the agricultural and mechanic arts.

By making their institution a college in name as well as fact, the trustees hoped it might more easily be designated the land grant institution of the Commonwealth.

FMA Begins Quality Control Program

The Fraternity Marketing Association, co-operative buying association for fraternities, has initiated a quality control program in an effort to increase the quality of food it buys for member fraternities.

The quality program was started during the summer, Robert Krakoff, FMA board of trustee member, said yesterday.

During the summer, Krakoff said, letters were sent to five wholesale houses asking for samples of their product. All companies responded, sending products such as peas, carrots, etc.

The products were then tested by a committee according to United States government testing standards.

Peas, Syrup Tested

Such things as the number of peas in a can, the amount, weight, and quality of syrup in a can, were tested by the committee. The tests of each product were then compared, and results sent to each vendor who sent in products to be tested. The results pointed out how certain products compared with others.

Heading the testing committee was Harold W. Perkins, assistant dean of men and advisor to FMA. Others in the group were Louise Derbeque, Sigma Nu cook; Brownie Biales, housemother and food buyer for Delta Chi; John Seastone, student member of the FMA board of trustees, and Marion Kiestler, secretary to FMA.

Program Just a Start

Krakoff said FMA hoped the quality control program would be the start of a program to give fraternities more and better food-stuffs at low cost.

FMA acts as a buying agent for all fraternity members. Fraternities, after being accepted to FMA membership, must pay a $100 deposit to FMA. This deposit serves as a checking account for the fraternity. Fraternity buys are charged against the deposit.

At the end of each month, member fraternities are required to replenish their balance until it reaches the $100 mark.

FMA Requirements

FMA membership requires a pledge from the member that it must buy at least 100 per cent of its canned goods or 100 per cent of its meat buys from the group. At least three dealers are approved in each category so that fraternities have a choice of dealers.

Fraternities make their orders through FMA, which has the meat or canned good delivered directly to the house. At the end of each month, bills are sent to the member fraternities. Bills are paid to FMA, which in turn pays the dealers.

FMA has been in operation four years, during which its annual gross business has grown from $16,000 to $136,500.

Chaplain's Offices

The offices of the Rev. Luther H. Harshbarger, University Chaplain and co-ordinator of religious affairs, have been moved from Waring Hall to Room 303, Old Main.
