Cars for Veterans: Only in Special Cases

Freshman veterans at the University who own or have access to cars today may be sitting back waiting expectantly for the Senate Committee on Student Affairs to lift the ban on freshmen operating autos as it applies to them. We do not think that they are going to have their hopes realized.

It is probably true that there are some cases in which the ban on freshman cars is creating a hardship as was mentioned at the All-University Cabinet meeting Thursday night. Cabinet passed a recommendation Thursday asking the Senate Committee on Student Affairs to allow freshmen with valid parking reasons to keep their cars at the University.

It is conceivable that some students who really need parking permits have been refused. If such cases exist, the Senate committee should act to rectify the injustice. But it is wrong to term the car ban as it applies to veterans "childish" as was done by Sophomore Class President Samuel Wolcott at Cabinet and thus perhaps raise the hopes of these students that they might be exempted from the restriction.

It is unfortunate that veterans, or any freshman for that matter, are not permitted to operate their cars in the State College vicinity. But it is a circumstance which exists of necessity. At present the University can not physically accommodate all the automobiles of its faculty and student body.

The University is working toward a solution of the problem in the near future, but the near future is not tomorrow.

Freshmen were made aware of the ban before they arrived on campus this fall through the literature normally sent to incoming students.

Because of this fact we find it difficult to understand the sudden disgruntlement on the part of the veterans in the freshman class.

Another fact to consider is that although the veterans among the freshmen probably account for only a small percentage of the enrollment of their class, they probably would proportionately operate many more cars than their younger counterparts if permitted to drive in the State College area.

Any observant person can notice as he walks around the campus that parking conditions are still crowded and traffic congested. Any additions to the ranks of those already permitted to drive in the campus environs would only serve to worsen present conditions.

Veterans must realize, therefore, that if any additional parking permits are issued they will not be granted because a student falls into a special category but because he is really in need of a car.

Fickle Students Pickle Campus Chest

You just can't tell about students. They are unpredictable, inconsistent, and accused of being illogical.

When the Jazz Club brought Max Kaminsky here last semester in cooperation with the Campus Chest the turn-out was fair, but after expenses were paid neither group had much to show for all their work.

But then, when the Jazz Club brought Dave Brubeck to Recreation Hall, even though there was a previously scheduled dance in the newly-opened Hetzel Union Building, more than the anticipated number of tickets were sold and the Jazz Club made money.

This really shocked the conservatives who predicted a loss for the Brubeck concert.

But you just can't tell about students.

Students are not even consistently apathetic. Upperclass sections were criticized for being so quiet at the Boston University game last Saturday, but over 2000 students turned out for the pep rally Thursday night to send the team off to West Point.

Another pleasant surprise.

It was only after a long hard fight that top student leaders and campus workers were given compensations. But last spring in the midst of the busiest work season of the year

All-University Cabinet voted to compensate only the All-University president, vice president and secretary-treasurer.

So there you are.

Four or five years ago students were deluged with so many solicitors for charitable purposes that the Campus Chest was established, almost in student-self-defense. It made charitable giving easy and protected the student from an endless line of open-handed donation seekers.

Again student reaction was strange.

Instead of appreciating the service Campus Chest was rendering them by combining all the fund-raising campaigns into one short drive, they became indifferent and almost put the Chest out of business last year by falling short of the $7250 goal. Only $4160 was collected.

Solicitation will be from October 18 to 22.

If they follow the pattern their predecessors have cut out for them they will be illogical and not support the 1955-56 Campus Chest campaign.

If they are inconsistent perhaps the campaign will be a booming success.

But if they are unpredictable—you just can't tell.

Oh Dem Bums

Don't count out them Bums.

Once they get to Flatbush they're tough.

The high-and-mighty gentlemen in the pin-stripe suits had that fact emphatically demonstrated to them yesterday when they haughtily strolled into Dodgerland only to get their haughty blocks knocked off.

The Brooks have never won a Series. But anyone in Greenpernt will tell you this is the year.

No team has never dropped the first two in the classic and rallied to win. But the Dodgers don't pay no attention to past performance. Don't count out them Bums.

Interpreting the News

The Silver Lining Of Ike's Illness

By J. M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst

If there is any comfort at all to be extracted from the President's illness it lies in the vast amount of information about the symptoms, causes and results of heart disease which has spread among the people.

Possibly excepting the spate following the announcement of the Salk polio vaccine, no single scientific problem has received such concentrated attention from all media of information since announcement of the atom bomb in 1954.

It is possible that the President's illness will have an even greater impact on the campaign against heart disease than did that of President Roosevelt on polio, because Eisenhower was stricken while in office and Roosevelt was not.

In that light, it is hard to understand why the President's aides should be embarrassed by any efforts to utilize the widespread public interest in raising money to fight the nation's No. 1 killer.

The presidential office is one, of course, which must be protected from use for most promotional purposes and the aides are probably right in wanting to wait for his own reaction on the point. But Eisenhower has so often expressed realization of the humanitarian aspects of the presidency that his later approval seems likely.

In this connection, also, one cannot help but wonder whether it is time for the government itself to start financing the research and promotion needed in the battles against all major diseases, such as heart trouble and cancer.

Would amply financed "crash" programs do far more quickly what the voluntary programs have done for polio and tuberculosis?

Experts disagree. One of the possibilities is that there may not be enough trained men to take advantage of suddenly increased research facilities.

Another possibility is that basic information is not yet sufficient on which to base such programs.

The crash program which produced the atom bomb could not have been conducted in 1920 for this reason. It could have been conducted in 1939. It was not begun until four years after that under the pressure of war. But Americans would be unhappy if concentrated attacks on any major disease should be delayed after the basic information is available.

Any suggestion for government support of such projects always raises the fear that they would advance the cause of socialism. This need not be true unless the authors and administrators of such projects wish it to be true. Inherently, the mass saving of life is not more socialistic than arrangements for its mass destruction.

Sororities to Begin Informal Rushing

Informal rushing will begin Tuesday and continue throughout the remainder of the semester, Joanne Caruso, Panhellenic Council president, announced yesterday.

All upperclasswomen interested in informal rushing may register any time at the dean of women's office, 105 Old Main.

Sorority women may pick up the names of the women rushing informally starting Tuesday at the dean of women's office.

Grad Scholarship To Honor Brown

The Walter N. Brown Jr. Memorial Graduate Scholarship has been established by Haller, Raymond, and Brown, Inc., to honor the late Walter N. Brown Jr.

Brown, a director and research consultant for Haller, Raymond, and Brown, Inc., and also a research associate in applied physics at the University, was drowned on Sept. 12 in the Atlantic Ocean at Long Branch, N.J.

The scholarship was established earlier this year and provides an annual stipend of $500 for a college graduate who enrolls for advanced work in a physical science. Delaware has the lowest mean elevation of any state in the U.S.
