

Wolcott Announces Nine IFC Workshop Meetings

Nine Interfraternity Council workshops will be held Tuesday through Thursday, Samuel Wolcott, workshop chairman, has announced.

The workshops, a yearly IFC project, will be divided into discussion groups which will meet at the house of the discussion leader Tuesday night. Discussions will be held concerning various fraternity problems, and suggestions for solutions to these problems will be aired.

If the groups feel they need more time, talks will be carried over to Wednesday night.

IFC workshop discussion leaders will meet at 7 p.m. Sunday in 217 Hetzel Union Building. Tentative agendas for the discussion groups will be drawn up at the meeting.

On Thursday, all people connected with the workshops will attend a banquet at 6 p.m. in the Hetzel Union Building. Three members from each house will be allowed to attend the banquet. The speaker will be Horace Nichol, national IFC vice-chairman.

To Publish Booklet
After the workshops are completed, a booklet will be published containing suggestions which were proposed at the various group discussions. Roger Alexander, Delta Tau Delta, will edit the booklet.

Each fraternity at the University will receive a copy of the booklet. Copies will also be sent to IFC organizations at other colleges and universities in the country.

Leaders Listed
Discussion leaders and the places where these groups will meet are Presidents: William Landis, Theta Chi; Rushing: Rich-

Centennial Lore

Tiger Inspires Lion Symbol

Fierce mountain lions that roamed the hills of Centre County in the past were chosen to serve as the University's athletic symbol more than four decades ago. And another wild beast, the tiger, served as the inspiration for the Penn State selection.

While visiting Princeton University as a member of the Penn State freshman baseball team, H. D. "Joe" Mason, class of 1907, saw a statue of the Bengal Tiger. The fact that his own school had no emblem rankled with the young freshman and on his return to the campus he began a campaign to have the mountain lion adopted as the University mascot.

The campaign was carried on by Mason and his friends in "The Lemon," a campus publication designed to direct "streams of astirgent juice at those things in and about the College that, in the eyes of the undergraduates, need betterment or abolishment."

One issue exhorted: "Why not for State College, our College, the best in all the menagerie of college pets? Our College is the best of all—then why not select for ours, the King of Beasts, the Lion?"

"The Lemon" further pointed out: "Dignified, courageous, magnificent, 'The Lion' allegorically represents all that our College Spirit should be. So why not 'The Nittany Mountain Lion'?"

At that time no other schools used the Lion as a symbol and it is believed that Penn State was the first to adopt it.

Mountain lions figured in the traditions of the school. They roamed the barrens of Centre County 30 years after the completion of Old Main. In 1868 eight were killed in one week by hunters. What is believed to be the last mountain lion shot in the State was a Centre County specimen killed in 1886.

The first pictorial representation of the University's emblem was not, however, that of the mountain lion. "La Vie," the University yearbook, in 1908 printed a picture of the African variety of the King of Beasts. But the idea of the lion as a Penn State symbol had been established and has been in use ever since.

The next important development in the history of the University's symbol came in 1923 when two alumni, H. I. "Hickey" Smith '07 and Cuthbert Mather '21, went hunting in Colorado and bagged two specimens of mountain lions, "Felix Cougar," the same kind that had roamed over Mount Nittany. These two stuffed specimens watched over athletes in Varsity Hall for many years.

To later generations of Penn State students, the Heinz Warneke sculpture for the Nittany Lion shrine near the entrance to the football stadium will always be the physical representation of the University's spirit.

This statue, three times life size, shows a sleek, powerfully muscled mountain lion crouched and ready to spring. It was the gift of the Class of 1940. Hewn out of a 13-ton block of Indiana limestone, it was dedicated during Homecoming Weekend in October, 1942.
