Hold Your Breath: This Is Penn State

The thousands of alumni returning to the University for what promises to be one of the better football games in the history of Penn State sports will find many changes and additions around the campus which will literally take their breath away.

Perhaps most impressive will be the new Hetzel Union Building opened only last February on the University's 100th birthday.

In addition to the splendid leisure facilities available in the HUB, alums will find the University's own post office from which over one million letters have been issued bearing the cancellation, "University Park, Pa."

In the process of completion the alumni will see the Helen Eakin Eisenhower Memorial Chapel and additional wings to the Infirmary.

The chapel will fulfill a long-standing need in the University community and will also serve to perpetuate the memory of the wife of Penn State's renowned president, Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower.

The infirmary additions represent a big step forward in handling the health needs of the University's ever-increasing student body.

Another project only recently completed is the nuclear reactor behind the Nittany Dorm area. In this building Penn State scientists are carrying out research which will greatly aid the national welfare and further enhance the University's reputation.

These are to mention but a few of the University's recent physical improvements. Many more buildings have been completed and plans are in the air and on the drawing boards for many more much-needed facilities.

Academically, the University has progressed far beyond the dreams of the founders of the Farmers High School. A true University now composed of nine colleges, the newest of which is Business, Penn State stands high among the nation's educational institutions.

Next Friday and Saturday the University is sponsoring a convocation to evaluate the contribution of land-grant institutions to higher education. This is truly a sign of the University's pioneering endeavor in education.

The University's administration, headed by Prexy Milton S. Eisenhower, as able, well-respected, and popular president as has ever headed an educational institution, has the respect of the faculty and student body alike.

The contributions of the Prexy to Penn State are innumerable and it will suffice to say in our limited space that no man has done more for the University.

The alumni can feel confident that their school is in good hands and is ever-progressing. They can be sure that the whole of the University, students, faculty, and administration, are all working toward a common goal—a better Penn State. —The Editor.

Protests Tickets Curbs

TO THE EDITOR: It seems to me that it is time for someone to remind the Athletic Association that sale of tickets is final. Additions, qualifications, restrictions, and the like, concerning the use of tickets aren't established after their sale.

It is customary that restrictions governing the use of tickets be printed on them. Generally, in situations such as this, new tickets are issued to replace the erroneous set.

Many students have made arrangements for others to use the tickets which they found themselves unable to use. After all, is it not better to have someone in the stands cheering our team than to have an empty seat? Unless the AA feels that they need not follow customary procedure, perhaps they should sit back and take note.

We all hope they don't make the same errors next year.

Living Alums Total 54,000 Alumni Association Reports

The University claims approximately 54,000 living alumni, of whom 49,000 are on the active mailing list of the Alumni Association, according to figures released by the association.

The figure of 49,000 represents those alumni for whom the Association has a correct address.

Of these, 12,085 are paid members of the Alumni Association. This number, too, is approximate, since it fluctuates from week to week. Four thousand, five hundred fifteen of these paid members are lifetime members.

Mrs. Helen Jackson Reber, now residing in St. Petersburg, Fla., claims the distinction of being the University's oldest living alumna, both in age and years since graduation.

Mrs. Jackson graduated in 1885 and is 93 years old. Although an invalid, she is reported in good mental health and spirits. Running close to Mrs. Jackson in both age and years since graduation is the University's second oldest living alumna, H. B. McDonald, who now lives in College Park, Md.

McDonald is 92. He graduated in 1886, and also is reported in good health.

Registration for Alumni returning to the University this weekend is being held on the first floor of the Hetzel Union Building, opposite the Hetzel Union desk.

A spokesman for the Alumni Association pointed out that this is appropriate, since University alumni, through the Alumni Fund, have contributed $56,921 toward the furnishings of the building during the past three years.

This year marks the first time Alumni registration has been held in the HUB.

A graduate of the class of 1908, George D. Barbey, contacted at random during registration, said things have certainly changed in the 51 years since his enrollment.

"In those days, Old Main was practically the entire College," Barbey said. He said the only other buildings on campus were the Armory, Carnegie Library, just being dedicated, and McAlister Hall, which was under construction.

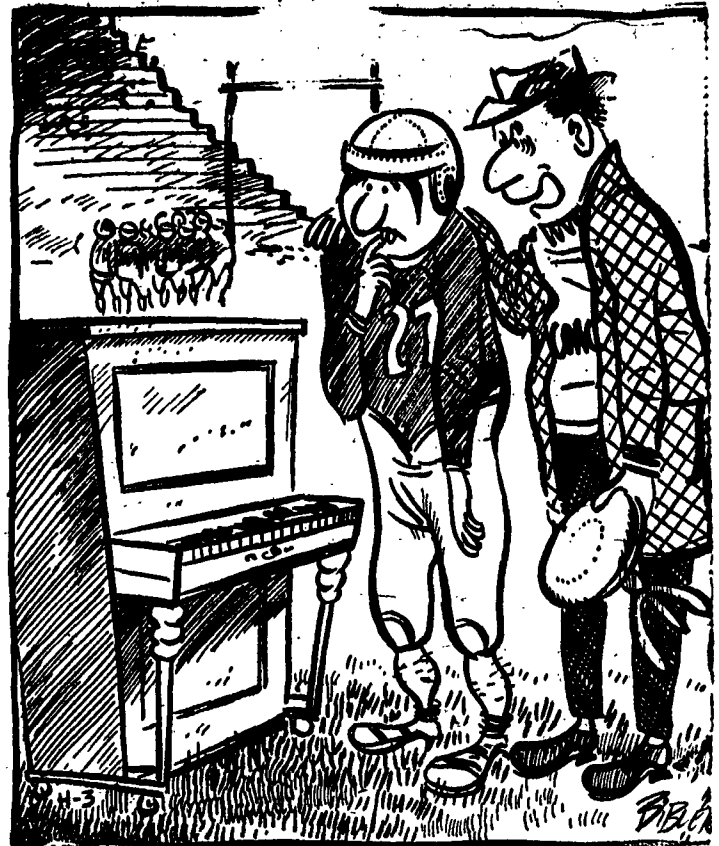

The Agriculture Building and the chemistry building now known as Walker Laboratory also stood then.

Barbey said enrollment at the College then was approximately 575, and a good freshman by the end of his first year could call every student by his first name. The ration was a little different then, too, Barbey said. To his recollection, he said, there were seven women in the entire college, and none in his class.

Most of the dormitories were located in Old Main, Barbey said, along with all the offices and several classrooms.

Little Man on Campus

Blue Band to Honor 9 Colleges Today

The Blue Band will honor the University Colleges during the half-time performance at the football game today.

After the fanfare, the band will march down the field playing "Nittany Lion" and then form an anchor and play the Navy hymn, "Eternal Father."

Moving into a "keystone" formation with an "S" in the center, the band will play the Alma Mater.

To honor the nine colleges, the band will make various formations and play songs denoting the college.

Ag College Song

For the Agriculture College, the band will form a farm tractor with the tread turning and play "Farmer in the Dell." The Mineral Industries College will be represented by an oil derrick formation and the song "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

An airplane formation with the drum major twirling his baton and the band playing "Come Josephine in My Flying Machine" will honor the Engineering and Architecture college.

For the Liberal Arts college, the group will form a bed and play "Sleep." To honor the Education college, the band will form a schoolhouse and play "In a Little Red Schoolhouse."

The College of Chemistry and Physics will be represented by a bomb formation, which will explode as the band members move to an "A-Bomb" cloud formation. The group will play "Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

Baseball Formation

To honor the Physical Education and Athletics college, the group will be in a baseball diamond formation and play "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." Then the band members will run in front of the stands as peanut vendors.

A teacup formation and the song "Tea for Two" will honor the Home Economics college. The College of Business Administration will be represented by a typewriter formation, with the band members moving up and down as the keys and the song "The Typewriter."

The band will then leave the field playing "Victory."

Hort Show Is Dedicated To Centennial

The Hort Show, which opens today, will be dedicated to the Centennial instead of to one man, as has been done for the last 41 years.

The show will begin at 10 a.m. today and continue until 10 tonight. Tomorrow the show will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The theme of the show, which will be held in the Livestock pavilion, is "Outdoor Living," designed to show how a modern backyard can be planned.

The visitor will enter the backyard through a simulated living room.

Backyard features include barbecue facilities, a dining area, flagstone terrace, flower and vegetable gardens, fruit trees, ornamental shrubs and plantings, a children's play area, and living grassy areas.

Also in the show will be special arrangements of flowers and a display of what can be grown in a home vegetable garden.

A sales stand will include potted plants and 16 kinds of apples. In the past only a few kinds of apples have been sold, but this year, as part of an educational program to show visitors the differences between apples, the other varieties were added. A food sales stand will sell cider and doughnuts.

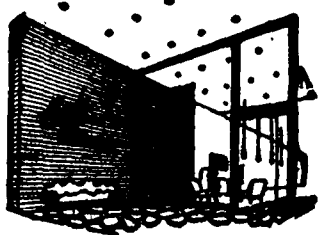

A printed program of the show will be given to visitors. Copies of the Penn State Farmer, which came out yesterday, will also be available.
