the University to hold the Ugly Man Contest.

Stroup also explained that it would give added spirit to the Pitt game, and could become a traditional contest in conjunction with this game.

Alpha Phi Omega expressed the opinion that the poster contest would give more students a chance to participate. It was brought out that dorm units could easily get together and make a poster where as they would have difficulty in putting up an Ugly Man contestant. Also suggested was the fact that fraternity and sorority groups have new pledge classes, for whom this would be an excellent project.

Richard Walchli, president of Alpha Phi Omega, appointed a committee of three members to formulate plans for the poster contest. Members of the committee are William Stiffler, chairman, senior in mechanical engineering from Fairless Hills; Edward Bachtel, senior in horticulture from Menden Hall; and Douglas Moorhead, senior in horticulture from North East.

trips and the plans to take courses, especially ones in art, history, and language, to aid in a better understanding of each country.

Charlotte Brown, sophomore in business administration from Altoona, felt that the most important part of the trip was the enlightenment that spread from the Choir, to the campus, and to the country. She felt that the understanding the choir gained through association with the people was most rewarding. Because the group presented more concerts in England, the Choir gained a better knowledge of the English people, she added.

Mrs. Selsam aided in the "practicalities of performing," such as getting the group into new places, seating them, and checking their entrances and exits. She was particularly thrilled as she listened to the concert in Koblenz, Germany, and watched the favorable reaction of the audience who were responding to the art and music of the Choir.

On the Fourth of July, the audience at the performance in the American colony of Bonn included alumni of the University. Contrary to the usual concert performance, the Choir sang American and Penn State songs. Mrs. Selsam commented on her pleasure at seeing the brightened faces of the alumni who joined in the singing.

The last concert of the trip at Amsterdam, Holland had an emotional impact that was felt by both the Choir and the audience, Mrs. Selsam said. It was the last time that the group would sing together and the "feeling of the occasion" was noticed in the singing that had a special spiritual quality.

Switzerland and Germany were the favorite countries of Gerald Hodge, senior in business administration from Greenville. The people were progressive and aggressive, he added.
