

Queen to Be Crowned Cabinet Postpones Discussion on NSA

Claude Thornhill, his piano and his orchestra, will play at the semi-formal Junior Prom from 9 to 1 tonight in Recreation Hall.

Thornhill will crown the Junior Prom queen at 10:15 p.m. during intermission. Members of the junior men's hat societies—Androcles, Druids, and Blue Key—will form an honor guard, and the runners-up will serve as members of the queen's court.

Robert Bahrenburg, junior class president, will present a trophy to the queen. The five finalists are Joetta Laing, arts and letters major from State College, sponsored by Delta Delta Delta; Martha Fleming, home economics major from Huntingdon, sponsored by Kappa Alpha Theta; Gillian Hamer, arts and letters major from Livramento, Brazil, sponsored by Town Independent Men.

Rossiter To Present LA Lecture

"The Shaping of the American Tradition," will be discussed by Dr. Clinton Rossiter, associate professor of government at Cornell University at the Liberal Arts lecture series at 8 p.m. Tuesday in 121 Sparks.

Dr. Rossiter, who was director of the Ford Foundation Fund for the Republic study of communism in America, is the author of many books on American history and government.

His most outstanding book, "Seedtime of the Republic," was the winner of the Bancroft prize in American history, the Woodrow Wilson Foundation prize, and the prize of the Institute of Early American History and Culture.

He is also the author of "Conservatism in America," "The Supreme Court and the Commander in Chief," "Documents in American Government," and "Constitutional Dictatorship." Copies of these books are on display in Pattee Library.

In addition to his books, Dr. Rossiter has contributed articles to Fortune magazine, The Yale Review, The American Scholar, and other publications.

Born in Philadelphia in 1917, Dr. Rossiter received his B.A. degree from Cornell University and his M.A. and Ph.D. degree in politics from Princeton University.

In 1946 he joined the department of government at Cornell University.

Dr. Rossiter is president of the New York state Political Science Association. He is a member of the executive councils of the American Political Science Association and the American Studies Association.

Traffic Rules Set by Police

Special traffic rules for the weekend have been set up in State College by the police department.

No parking will be allowed on the campus side of College avenue from Burrows road to Locust Lane for the Band Day parade on Saturday. This regulation will apply from early in the morning until immediately after the parade.

The usual post-game rules apply to the downtown area. Included are one-way westbound on College avenue and one-way eastbound on Beaver avenue, between Pugh and Atherton streets.

A new traffic control measure will be tried Sunday from 8 a.m. until after church services. One-way traffic on McAllister street will be directed from Beaver to College avenue, according to Chief John R. Juba.

Six Students Claim to See Flying Saucers

Two flying saucers flew over campus Wednesday night, according to a student from the Nittany area.

Richard Wagner, freshman in chemical engineering from Lincoln Park, reported that he and five other students saw the two objects about 11 p.m. Wednesday outside of dorm 39.

Wagner said the "saucers" were traveling at an estimated 1400 miles per hour, gave a sodium-colored (yellow) light, were present for about two minutes, and were accompanied by a roaring sound, like a "hum."

He further said two students from the Pollock area told him they also saw the objects.

Officials of the department of meteorology said yesterday that they could give "no logical explanation" for the presence of the objects. They said weather balloons were ruled out because of the accompanying sound.

Two Air Force officers said they saw what they thought to be a low-flying plane at the same time the students saw the "saucers."

If the pilot had the landing lights on, there is a possibility that they could have appeared yellow in color through the atmosphere, they said.

All-University Cabinet decided last night to "postpone definitely" discussion on the resumption of University membership in the National Student Association.

Cabinet voted the postponement as a direct result of a motion by Robert Bullock, Interfraternity Council president, and the indirect urging of Philip Beard, All-University secretary-treasurer, who brought up a second point.

Bullock moved that Cabinet table discussion until eight letters had been sent to colleges and universities of a comparable size to the University. Four letters would be sent to universities belonging to NSA and four would be sent to universities not belonging to the organization.

The four letters to universities in NSA would ask what they are doing for NSA, what they are receiving from it, and how the program is working and being received by their student bodies. The remaining four letters would question the universities not belonging to NSA as to their reasons for not joining it.

15 Vote for Motion
Cabinet voted 15-6, with one abstention, on the postponement with the stipulation that when answers to the eight letters are received, discussion would again get underway.

Beard urged postponement of discussion for a reason which completely surprised most Cabinet members. He displayed a lengthy report entitled, "The Draft and Internal Security," by Rowland Watts, of the Baltimore Bar, which NSA has sent to approximately 125 colleges and universities.

The report was accompanied by a letter requesting college newspaper editors to read it and present its points to their student bodies.

Report Composed of Cases
Beard said the report was composed of cases gathered by the Workers' Defense League, which is considered by the government a subversive organization.

Listed in the report are case histories of college students who were discharged by the armed forces because they were members of subversive organizations. The document implied the disapproval of these discharges and
